— I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy Candlestick out of his Place, except thou repent.

WE are this Day met together to humble ourselves for our Sins before God, and to implore his Mercy to this Nation, in the Preserving our King, our Laws, our Religion and our Lives, V O L. II. B and

and in Blessing the present Publick Counsels, in order thereunto.

And never was a Work of this Nature more seasonable or more necessary than at this Time, and to us of this Kingdom: For as our Sins were never greater, never cried louder to Heaven for Vengeance, so the Judgments they deserve did never more visibly threaten us than they do at this Day. Infomuch, that if our Circumstances be duly considered, we may have just Reason to apprehend, that our Saviour in the way of his Providence does now speak to the People and Church of England the same Words, that he ordered St. John, by the way of Letter, to speak to the Church of Ephesus. Remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first Works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy Candlestick out of his Place, except thou repent.

This Church of Ephesus, as also the other Six Churches of Asia, to each of which St. John, by the Command of our Saviour, doth here address a several Epistle, were at the Time when these Letters were dictated very flourishing Churches, favoured as much with the especial Presence and Influence of Christ, as ever any Churches were.

This appears from the Preface to this Epistle in the first Verse of this Chapter, wherein Christ, the Author of the Epistle, is described, as holding the Seven Stars in his right right Hand, and walking in the midst of the Seven Golden Candlesticks.

The Seven Stars are the Angels of the Seven Churches, as he himself interprets them, that is, according to the Sense of all Antiquity, the Bishops, the Presidents, the Governours of those Churches. His holding them in his Hand, is his supporting and directing them for the Good of the People. The Seven Golden Candlesticks in the midst of which he walked, are, as he himself likewise expounds them, the Seven Churches themselves, as being the Places where those Stars, those Lights did shine. And his walking among those Candlesticks is his Presence in those Churches, Encouraging or Reproving, Rewarding or Punishing the Members of them, as there was Cause, having the Power in his Hands, either to continue those Lights among them, or to remove them to another Place. Cap. i. 20. Ibid.

I insist on the Explication of this Passage, because it lets us in to the Meaning of the Phrase that we meet with in the Text, of removing the Candlestick out of its Place, which from hence we plainly see to be the Un-Churching any People, the withdrawing the Light of the Gospel from them.

Well, but this Church of Ephesus, to which the Epistle I am now concerned in was written, how much soever Christ had done for them, had, it seems, made but a bad Requital of his Kindnesses. At first Cap. ii. 2, indeed they had walked very worthily, and are much commended by our Saviour, for their Zeal and Piety and Labour in Religion, but now they were fallen to a great Degree of Negligence and Remissness.

It is true, they at this Time continued Orthodox in their Doctrines and Opinions, they did both know and profess the true Religion, and were zealous against false Doctrines, which also our Saviour takes notice of and commends them for, This, saith he, thou hast, That thou hatest the Deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate; but yet notwithstanding, so offended was he with the Loss of their first Love, the Decay of Devotion and Charity among them, that he threatens them solemnly in the Text, That if they did not repent, and do the first Works, he would remove their Candlestick out of its Place; that is, as I said, he would withdraw from them his Presence and the Light of his Gospel.

This is a brief Account of my Text, as to the first Design and literal Meaning of it, that is, as it concerns the Church of Ephesus. I now desire leave to make such Application of it to ourselves, as may be subservient to the Ends designed in the Solemnity of this Day.

And we have warrant enough to make such an Application; for let us not flatter ourselves, what is here Reproved, and what is here Threatened, hath not such a peculiar Respect to the particular Church of Ephesus,

Jus, but that it doth equally concern all Churches so far as they fall under the same Character. Which whether we at this Day do or no, it is fit we should seriously examine ourselves about.

Here are Three Things considerable in the Text. First, A great Sin, and Guilt, supposed. Secondly, A great Judgment denounced for that Guilt, no less than the Un-Churching of that People that had contracted it. Thirdly, The Means prescribed for the averting that Judgment, viz. Repentance.

My Application of the Text shall proceed upon the same Heads, that is,

I shall first desire leave to enquire, whether we of this Nation, at this Day, for our manifold Sins and Guilt, may not be judged to be in as bad or worse Circumstances than the Church of Ephesus in the Text, and consequently have not just Reason to fear the same Judgment that they are here threatned with.

Secondly, I shall consider the Judgment here threatned, how grievous a one it is, and consequently how great an Argument the Consideration of it ought to be to us all to Repent.

Thirdly, I shall speak something of this Repentance, how it ought to be express, if we would thereby prevent the Judgment.

I begin with the first of these Points, which concerns our Sin and our Guilt, to make some Representation of the Spiritual Maladies and Diseases that this Nation groans under, those publick Grievances by which the Holy Spirit of God is provoked to withdraw himself from us, and to give us up to the Power and Dominion of other Masters.

The First Sermon,

This I must confess, is a very melancholy and displeasing Argument, but yet very necessary to be insisted on, and that very freely too: Especially upon such an Occasion as this; and most of all, when I speak to those whose Concernment, and whose Care it is to inspect these Matters, and from whom we hope for a Cure of our Distempers.

It is here taken Notice of the Church of Ephesus, to her Commendation, that she retained the Truth of the Christian Doctrine in Opposition to the Heresies of those Times, and this, God be thanked, may be spoke of us at this Day, we are not much degenerated from the Purity of Christianity as to Doctrinals. Our Church may vie with all the Churches in the World, for Orthodoxy and Conformity to the Primitive Church in Matters of Faith.

And, blessed be God's Name, this Light is not put under a Bushel. There is perhaps no Church since the Apostles Time wherein the Divine Truth hath been more publickly and more purely taught, or the Sacraments more rightly and duly Administered than among us, and no Church wherein

in Knowledge has more abounded among all the Members of it than it does now in Ours.

But the Thing that is charged upon the Church of Ephesus, is their Corruption in Manners; and this is the Point we are now concerned in, and which 'tis fit the whole Nation should examine themselves upon, and deeply lay to Heart.

Though we still keep up the Form of Godliness, yet have we not in a great Measure lost the Power thereof? Though the Principles which our Church Owneth and Professeth be excellently good; yet do not many of us horribly contradict them in our Practices? Is there not a visible Decay of Christian Piety to be observed among us, and a Deluge of Vice and Wickedness of all Sorts over-spreading the Face of the Land?

I speak not here of the Faults of this or the other particular Person, for we know there was never any Age nor any Religion that was free from such; but I speak of the National Sins, the reigning Vices of the Times, the Miscarriages that are so prevailing and so common that a publick Guilt is contracted by them, and the whole People may justly share in the Punishment of them.

I must confess, to speak strictly, the Degrees and Proportions in which any Age grows better or worse than those that went before it, are not easily to be measured, unless we could live the Space of several Ages, and out of our own Experience make Observations and Remarks upon them. All that we have to make our Estimate by, is the Histories and Records that are left us of the State of former Ages with which we may compare our own; but yet this way is often very fallacious, because it is the common Humour and Custom of Men, even of those that transmit the Memoirs of their own Times to Posterity, still to complain of their own Times most, and to prefer the former Ages before that in which they live.

Upon this Consideration I shall not be forward to draw a Comparison between the former Times and ours in order to the shewing how much greater our Sins are than of those that went before us, and consequently how much riper we are now for Judgment.

Most certain it is, that God, as he has done to the Sea, so has he to every Nation, set its Bounds of Wickedness beyond which they shall not pass; and when their Iniquities are at full, he will not fail to repay Vengeance into their Bosom. The Canaanites, the Jews, and many other Nations I might name, have been sad Instances of this kind of proceeding.

But when a Nation is come to that fatal Period none knows but God, and whether we are not already very near it, we cannot tell, but we ought infinitely to fear.

Too evident it is, that Things are in a very bad Posture among us, and our Sins are grown to that height, that it is a Miracle of the Divine Patience and Long-suffering that we are not already consumed. Let us be more particular.

If the prevailing of Atheism in a Land, and the Contempt of God and Religion :

If open Lewdness and Debauchery, and Immorality of all Kinds :

If the turning Religion into a mere Piece of Formality, and outward Profession :

If Schisms and Divisions and Factions in a Church :

And lastly, If our general Unthankfulness for and Unprofitableness under the Means of Grace, and the many Mercies and Privileges that have been vouchsafed us :

If any or all of these Sins can provoke God to forsake a Nation and give it up to ruin (and yet these Sins are both in the Scripture, and by the ordinary Course of God's Providence especially markt out for such) then are we of this Nation at this Time in a very deplorable Condition, and are to expect Judgment without Mercy, unless it be prevented by a speedy Reformation.

For first of all, was there ever more Atheism and Irreligion in a Christian Nation, at least in a Protestant Christian Nation; or more Countenance given to such Doctrines and Opinions as directly tend thereto than now among us?

There are not many, perhaps, that dare in exprefs Terms affirm, That there is no God, because they know it is not safe so to do: But many affirm it by Consequence, by asserting such Principles from whence it must necessarily be concluded.

For what is the Consequence of such Doctrines as these; That there is nothing but Body in the World, and that the very Notion of a Spiritual Incorporeal Being implies a Contradiction; That there is nothing Just or Unjust, Vertuous or Vicious in itself, but as it is made so by the Laws of the Kingdom. That all Things come to pass by a fatal Necessity, and that no Man is so free an Agent as to be capable of Rewards and Punishments for his Actions: What is the Result of these Doctrines, but the necessary introducing of Atheism and the banishing Religion from among Men? It being upon these Principles, not only a needless impertinent, but an absurd contradictory Thing.

And yet are not these the avowed Principles of too many among us, and those too that are the great Pretenders to Reason and Philosophy?

But what has been the Effect of such Philosophy? Why suitable enough to the Notions of it: You may meet with those that make no scruple to scoff at God and every every

every thing that relates to the other World, and to turn into Ridicule every Thing that is Sacred. And he is accounted the Great Spirit that thinks freely, and dares speak boldly what he thinks. And if a Man will set up for a Wit, he cannot take a more effectual Course to gain him that Reputation in many Companies, than to be confident and peremptory in contradicting the common Sentiments of Men as to Religion, to be able to Burlesque the Scriptures humorously, to be dexterous in imploing Religious Phrases to Scurrilous Purposes, and to Baffle and Droll out of Countenance, those that stand up for the Reputation of Sacred Things.

As the World goes, it is a piece of Vertue to believe a God and Providence, and future Rewards and Punishments, with the other Principles of Natural Religion; they do very well that go thus far. But as for Instituted Revealed Religion; for Instance, Christianity, How many are there that think themselves no way concerned in it, but hold it in the same Rank with Judaism and Mahometanism? And if they profess that rather than either of these, it is only because they were Born and Bred up in it; it is the Religion of the Country where they live; but if either of the other should be set up in the Place of it, they would as willingly conform to that.

The First Sermon.

One would think that such Men as these should not be found in a Country that calls itself Christian, much less in a Christian Country that calls itself Reformed; and yet such is the Infelicity and the Fault of ours, that Men of these Principles and Practices do abound among us. O Blessed God! Whither shall we come at last, if timely Care be not taken of these Things?

But Secondly, If to the Atheism and Infidelity that Reigns among us, we add the open Prophaneness and Debauchery that is every where to be observed in our Days, how much blacker will our Guilt appear?

Where is that Ancient Seriousness and Reservedness, and Modesty, that heretofore has been thought not only Essential to the Spirit of a Christian, but Natural to the Temper of an Englishman?

Alas! We seem to have changed not only our Religion, but our Climate too: And may for Dissoluteness and Luxury, for Pride and Vanity, and Idleness, compare with the Ancient Asiatics, and do perhaps out-strip several of our present Neighbour Nations, though of a worse Religion.

But this is not all; so much are we degenerated from the Ancient Strictness of Christianity, That those Things that would not have been named among the first Christians, without Horror, and Banishing nishing out of their Society all those that did them, are frequently practised among us. And those Vices that even in the worst Times of Christianity, the Actors were afraid or ashamed to own, are now made a Matter of Sport and Merriment, a Trick of Youth, a Humour, or a Frolick. What was then a Deed of Darknes, is now too often done in the Face of the Sun; and the Persons concerned in the Wickedness, are so far from blushing at their Guilt, that they relate their own Actions as a pleasant Entertainment for their Company.

O the Riots and Drunkenness; the Frauds and Coufenage; the Filthy and Lewd Speeches; the Whoredoms and Adulteries; the Blasphemous Oaths and Imprecations that are Daily, without any Regret, any Sense of Shame, practised among us.

We seem to have lost not only the Vertue of Modesty, but of Hypocrisie too (if so bad a Thing may be called by so good a Name.) Those Vices and Lewdnesses which heretofore sought Corners, and wore a Mask, do now appear with a naked Face.

It is true, it is to be hoped, That the greatest Part of us are not guilty of such Crimes and Immoralities as we speak of: But this does not wholly excuse us; for we are all faulty in this, that these kind of Vices

Vices are not sufficiently branded and put out of Countenance. They pass under Easie, not to say, Creditable Names. And so little a Sense have we of them, that a Man may keep his Reputation among us, though he be never so Vicious, supposing that his Vices be of the Mode of the Country. This very Thing, without our Personal Guilt makes the Sin a National Sin; and God will Visit these Things upon us, except we Repent.

But to make up the Measure of our Iniquities, we can in the Third Place live after this dissolute Rate, and yet at the same Time many of us think ourselves Religious: We increase the Guilt of our Prophaneness, by joyning Formality with it.

If we would disclaim all Religion, when we led such wretchedly Careless and Sensual Lives, it would in some Respects be more tolerable: For then Christianity would not suffer by us, it would get no Odium, no Ignominy in the World, it would not be an Occasion to Men to turn Atheists:

But to live Un-Christian Lives, and yet to call ourselves Christians; nay, to make our Religion a Sanctuary for our Vices, and to think that we may the more freely Indulge ourselves in them, because we are of the right Religion; this is intolerable, and extremely aggravates the Iniquity of our Practises. And yet this is a Fault that we of this Nation are notoriously guilty of.

We often make Religion to consist in Opinion, and outward Profession. If we have but once joined ourselves to that Party of Christians which we think is the Right, and do Espouse all their Controversies, and are Zealous in the Observance of their particular Forms and Rites, whereby they are distinguished from the other Sects that are in Being among us, we think we are true Saints, let our Morals be what they will.

This is the Religion that is every where too much in Fashion. If, for Instance, I have Listed my self a Member of some Church of the Separation, (as there is great Variety of them) if I be but true to the Principles of my Church, and vigorous in opposing those that are not of my Way; and constant in my Attendance upon the Brethren at their Assemblies; this Zeal of mine will excuse a Multitude of my other Failings: And though I now and then use indirect Ways of Dealing in my Calling; though I be Uncharitable and Censorious; though I affront Authority, and live in a constant Disobedience and Contempt of the Laws of it, yet my Fervour for that which I take to be the True Religion, and the Relation I stand in to the People of God, will bear me out as to these Matters.

On

On the other Side, If I be a Member of the Church of England, I am too often apt to think my self in a fair Way to Heaven, if I be but Stout for the Church, and Zealous against the Sectaries, and Punctual in observing the Ceremonies of the Liturgy, and now and then come to the Sacrament; Though it may be I have nothing of the True Life and Spirit of Christianity in me, nothing of that Sobriety and Meekness, and Charity, and inward Devotion that our Saviour doth indispensably require of all his Followers.

Nay, so far from that, it may be I think 'tis no Matter how I Live, if I be but a good Subject to the King, and a true Son of the Church. Nay, it is well if I don't go further, it is well if I don't make Vice and Debauchery an Essential Character of a Man that is right in his Principles; it is well if I don't brand Seriousness of Conversation, and a Care of ones Words and Actions, with the Name of Fanaticism, and Reproach every one as a Puritan, that will not Swear and Drink, and take those Un-Christian Liberties that I do.

You know there are such Men as these frequently to be found in all the several Seets and Ways of Religion among us. But, O! what is become of Christianity all the while.

This

This sure cannot be thy Religion, O Blessed Jesus! since it is so unlike both thy Actions and thy Doctrines: Thou never placedst any Vertue or Praise in Knowing, but in Doing; in being of this or the other particular External Mode of Religion; but in believing thy Gospel, and following thy Example, in Mortifying our Lusts, and leading a Life of Peaceableness, and Obedience; and Humility, and all manner of inward Holiness and Purity.

How our Brethren of the Separation will dispose of their Members that are of this Temper, I know not; but as to all those that pretend to be of our Communion, and yet live scandalous Lives, and think that their owning themselves for the Sons of the Church, will make Attenuation for their Immoralities, it is to be feared they have done us more Hurt than ever they will do us Good. And unless they would Reform, it may perhaps be wished that we were rid of them: Let them declare themselves Fanaticks, Papists; any Thing, rather than Members of the Church of England.

And though by their Recession, and going over to the Enemies Camp, we might possibly be so weakened, that we could not support ourselves, but must be forced to fall under our Adversaries; yet I do not know whether even then the Church would not be the better for it. And, it would, perhaps, be more desirable to live in a mean, low, afflicted Condition without such Company, than to govern the World with it.

But Fourthly, These are not all the Maladies which this distressed Church and Nation labours under: There is another Wound that is as wide, and bleeds as much as any of the rest: And which, if timely Care be not taken of it, may cause her Expiration as soon as any other.

I mean the Unnatural, Un-Christian Feuds and Divisions that are amongst us, our Nations being rent and torn into so many Parties and Factions, and the cruel and bitter Animosities with which each Party does prosecute the other. And all this, if Men would consider, for little Things in Comparison, Things certainly not worth all this Heat, Things that the *Wise*st and Best of the several Dissenting Parties confess to be indifferent.

O! How do Men by these foolish and unaccountable Divisions, weaken the common Interest that all pretend at least to be concerned for? What Advantages are hereby given to the Adversaries?

It is likely, indeed, that as they first set on Foot, so they still continue to foment foment these Differences. They laugh at this Opportunity of making Profelytes to their Religion; and a plentiful Harvest they have hereby Reaped to themselves.

But where is our Wisdom in the mean Time? Have Men no more Understanding, than to be still hot and eager in their Contentions about a Shadow, when there is an Enemy at the Gate, that is in a fair Way to take from us the Substance?

Some, indeed, may be apt to dispute which Side ought to comply; Whether the Dissenters ought to come over to the Established Church, or the Church to them? It is not now a Time fully to debate the Merits of that Cause. But this may be truly said, If Men would be honest and sincere, and mix no Passion or worldly Concernment with their Religion, the Point would soon be decided on the Church's Side.

Every Man that calls himself a Protestant, would think himself obliged to obey Lawful Authority in all Things, where he was convinced their Commands were not Unlawful. And if he could not, with a safe Conscience, come up to it in all Things, he would come up as far as he could. And as for those Things that he was not satisfied about, as he would not Condemn or Censure those that were

were persuaded, or practised otherwise, so neither would he raise any Disturbance in the Church, by joyning himself to an opposite Party.

And on the other Side, those that did Conform to the Church in all Things, would not withdraw their Charity from their Fellow-Christians, for not doing so much as they. Though they differed from them in several Opinions, yet they would joyn Hands with them in all Christian Offices of mutual Love and Charity, and in a joynt Opposition of the Common Enemy.

But alas! Things are not thus with us. And I note it as a Fault, for which we ought deeply to be affected this Day; and if Men did duly weigh the Sinfulness and the Danger that all Schisms and Separations of this Kind, do bring upon a Nation, they would be thus affected.

If human Conjectures about the Reasons and Causes of Divine Judgments may be allowed, it will appear from History and Experience, that there has been as much War and Blood-shed caused in the World; as many Nations Defolated, as many Churches Ruined by the Malignity and Evil Influence of this Sin of Schism, as any other.

And if ever God in Judgment shall think fit to give over this flourishing Church of ours, as a Prey to that mighty Hunter,

Hunter, that would erect an Universal Spiritual Monarchy to himself, upon the Ruines of all the particular Churches of Christendom, we should have good Reason to believe, that the unnecessary Divisions and Quarrels among ourselves, had a great Hand in bringing on the Judgment.

In all Appearance, we of this Nation might be Impregnable, as to our Religion, if those Protestants among us, who have been so long separated from the Communion of our National Church, would once return into its Bosom; that we might all heartily join together in Loving and Assisting one another, and Opposing the publick Adversary.

But Fifthly and Lastly, If the State of our Church and Nation was not near so bad as I have now represented it, yet there is another Thing still, that all, even the best of us, have reason to be sensible of, and to mourn for; as that, which of itself is sufficient to bring Destruction upon us. And that is, our Ingratitude to God for his many Mercies and Deliverances, and our Unprofitableness under those Means of Grace that he has been pleased so long to afford us.

I cannot call this a particular Sin, it is, if you will, an Aggravation of all the rest, or all of them summed up together. However, I give it a particular Consideration, because it is a Thing that God has set a Mark upon, and has so far declared his Displeasure against it, that he has determined it a just Cause to Un-people or Un-Church a Nation.

Our Saviour tells us, that when a certain Man had Planted a Fig-Tree in his Vineyard, and came and sought Fruit thereon, and found none he said unto the Luke xiii.

6. Dresser of his Vineyard, Behold these Three Years I come, seeking Fruit on this Fig-Tree, and find none, cut it down, why doth it cumber the Ground?

Let us apply this Parable to ourselves, as certainly the Reason of it will sufficiently prompt us. Was ever Fig-tree or Vineyard more curiously Planted, more carefully Drest, more richly Manured, more securely Fenced, from the Outrages of Beasts of Prey, than our Fig-Tree, our Vineyard, the Church of England? For of a Church this Parable is necessarily to be understood.

Is there any one of the Protestant Churches in Europe, that has been so regularly Reformed; that in the first Constitution of it was Established upon Principles so justifiable, so agreeable with the Laws of Nature and Christianity, and the Civil Rights of the Kingdom, as this Church of England was?

Is there any Protestant Church in Europe, whose Articles of Faith; whose Discipline; whose whose Manner and Rites of Worship are more correspondent to Ancient Tradition and Catholick Doctrin and Practice?

Is there any Protestant Church in Europe, wherein the Word of God has been taught more sincerely, and more to the edification of the People than among us?

Is there any Protestant Church that has more comfortably lived under their own Vines, and their own Fig-Trees, has more freely enjoyed all the Benefits and Privileges that either Religion or their Birth-right could Intitle them to, than we have done?

Is there any Protestant Church that has been preserved so miraculously, that hath received so many wonderful Deliverances from Enemies of all Sorts: Enemies of the Hills and of the Vallies: And yet notwithstanding all; notwithstanding the Contrivances of false Brethren within ourselves, and the Assaults of the Publick Adversaries Abroad, does still not only continue in Being, but Flourisheth also, as God be thanked we do at this Day?

The Care that God hath taken of this Nation hath been wonderful; his Providences towards us are to be admired for the Rareness and the Graciousness of them. And therefore justly may the Lord of the Vineyard, after all this Care, all these Providences, expect some Good Fruit from us, proportionable to his Kindness to us. And long has he waited for it.

The First Sermon.

But what Fruits have we produced after all these great Opportunities, and this great Patience? Can we really say, that we now are Better than our Fore-Fathers of the Reformation, who perhaps had not more Light, certainly had not that Experience of God's Mercies and Deliverances that we have? I am afraid our Hearts will give it against us.

Can we say that we are not worse than they? That we have, at least, made as good an Use and Improvement of the Talents that have been committed to us, as they did? It is to be feared we shall be cast upon this Point also.

Our own Experience will tell us, if we have lived any considerable Time in the World, That even since our Remembrance, though God hath more and more, both heaped his Favours and his Severities upon us, yet we have grown worse and worse.

His Mercies have not Melted us; His Judgments have not Reclaimed us; He hath done all that is Possible, both by Gentle and Severe Methods, to bring us to a Sense of our Duty; but We, like the Deaf Adder, have stopped our Ears, and have not

not hearkened to the Voice of the Charmer, though he charmed never so wisely.

What therefore, these Things considered, can we expect, but that God should pass the same Sentence upon this Unthankful, this Irreclaimable People of England, that the Lord of the Vineyard passed upon the Fig-Tree in the Parable: Cut it down, why doth it cumber the Ground?

Or, if you will take it in the Words of the Prophet, what should hinder, or what can we expect, but that God should speak to us, (that is, decree upon us) what he did to his beloved People, in the Fifth of Isaiab's Prophecy, O Inhabitants of Jerusalem, and Men of Judah, Judge, I pray you, between me and my Vineyard. What could I have done more to my Vineyard, that I have not done in it? Wherefore then, when I looked that it should bring forth Grapes, brought it forth wild Grapes? And now go to, I will tell you what I will do with my Vineyard; I will take away the Hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the Wall thereof, and it shall be troden down, and I will lay it Waste, it shall not be Pruned or Digged, but there shall come up Briars and Thorns.

This is the Judgment that is here threatened in the Text, which I now come, in the Second Place, more particularly to consider.

A grievous Judgment without doubt it is, and the greatest that can fall upon any Nation: For so much as our Souls are of greater Concernment to us than our Bodies; so much are Spiritual Mercies to be preferred before Temporal: And so much the greater Misery is it for any People to be deprived of them than of the other.

For that Nation that was once God's own peculiar People to be abandoned by him, and to be laid in common with the rest of the World that are under the Prince of the Power of the Air; for that Nation that once enjoyed the Influences of God's Presence, and the Light of the Truth, and the Benefits of his Ordinances, now to be stript of all these; to be without God, without Light, without the ordinary Means of saving their Souls; O what more deplorable Condition can be imagined!

And yet thus severe hath God been with many Nations, thus when their Sins have cried loud, and the Sinners have been impudent, and all Methods of Amendment have been ineffectual, God hath in anger removed their Candlestick from among them.

The Church of Ephesus which Christ thus threatens in the Text, nay, all the other Six Churches of Asia, to which the Epistles are sent, are sad Instances of this. Once most flourishing Churches they were, even the very Paradise of the Lord; but now they lie waste and desolate, over-run with Ignorance and Barbarity and Mahometanism.

That Africa which is not now more fruitful of Monsters, than it was once of excellently Wise and Learned Men; that Africa which formerly afforded us our Clemens, our Origen, our Tertullian, our Cyprian, our Augustine, and many other extraordinary Lights in the Church of God; that famous Africa in whose Soil Christianity did thrive so prodigiously, and could boast of so many flourishing Churches, alas; is now a Wilderness. The wild Boars have broken into the Vineyard and eaten it up, and it brings forth nothing but Briers and Thorns: To use the Words of the Prophet.

And who knows but God may suddenly make this Church and Nation, this our England, which, Jeshurun-like, is waxed fat and grown proud, and has kicked against God, such another Example of the Vengeance of this Kind.

It is true, in all appearance there is no danger of having our Candlestick removed from us in the same Sense or Manner that those Churches I have Instanced in, had theirs. We have no Apprehensions that either Mahometanism or Paganism will come into these Kingdoms: At least not in our Days.

It is another kind of Removal of our Candlestick that we have reason to fear; It is another Religion nigher at hand that is most likely to displace our Candlestick.

You all know what Religion I mean, It is Popery that most threatens us. It is that restless busie Religion that has made so much disturbance in Christendom; that has always been and is still so active by all Means just or unjust, by Fraud or Force to insinuate itself into all Places. It is this we ought to have the most Apprehensions of.

It is true, those that are of this Religion do profess the Name of Christ, and we do not deny them the Title of a Christian Church; But of all Sorts of Christianity this seems to be the worst; and next to the Being of no Church, it is the least desirable to be of This,

And for all the specious Titles of Visible and Perpetual and Catholick and Infallible, which they would amuse us with; If we did seriously consider what a kind of Religion we now enjoy, and what a kind of Religion will come in the Place of it, if ever they get their Will of us, we should sadly reflect upon the Change. And for all we continued a Christian Country, yet we should lament over ourselves that our Candlestick was removed out of its Place.

I believe there are few here but sufficiently understand what a kind of Religion this is, and what you are to expect from

it :

it: But yet I will beg leave to give a brief Account of some of the Articles of it. Not to instruct you, but to give you occasion to consider how well it will suit with us of this Kingdom, or indeed with any that would be Christians after the way of Christ's Institution.

It is a Religion, whose avowed Principles are to keep their People in Ignorance as much as they can. For with them Ignorance is the Mother of Devotion. And if you do but blindly Believe as the Church Believes, and blindly Obey what is imposed upon you, you are good Catholicks.

It is a Religion, in which you will not be allowed to have any Prayers in publick that you can understand. When you come to Church, you may entertain yourselves with saying over your Rosary (which is a solemn Set of Prayers containing Ten Addresses to the Virgin Mary for One to our Lord) and other Private Prayers, if you have them: But joyn in the Publick Service with the Minister you cannot, unless you understand Latin.

It is a Religion, into which as soon as you enter you must give up your Bibles. For the People must not read the Scripture without especial License, and not at all of that Translation you now have of it.

It is a Religion that robs you of half the Sacrament: For you must never be allowed to receive the Cup in the Lord's Supper;

per ; notwithstanding the Institution of our Lord in exprefs Words : And notwithstanding the Practice of the Primitive Church to the contrary.

It is a Religion, in which you are fo far from being permitted to try all things and to hold to that which is good, according to the Apostle's Command ; That you must wholly submit your Reason and Understanding to the Dictates of an Infallible Judge, even fo far, (if one of their greatest Authors say true) to be bound to believe Vertue to be Bad, and Vice to be Good, if it shall please his Holiness to say fo.

Bellar. de
Rom. Pon-
tif. lib. 4.
cap. 5.

Nay, it is a Religion in which you shall not be allowed to believe your very Senses. For though Four of your Five Senses tell you that One of the Consecrated Elements in the Sacrament is a Piece of Bread, yet you are obliged, under Pain of Damnation, to believe that it is not fo ; But the very Body of Christ that was Crucified at Jerusalem, and is now in Heaven ; and which, upon this Supposition, must be actually and separately present in a thousand distant Places at once every Day.

It is a Religion that will bring you back to the Old Paganish Idolatry : Or to that which is as near it as can be. For as the Old Heathens had their inferior Deities, their Demons and Hero's to be Mediators between God and them : So will you have your several Saints and Patrons of the like

Na-

Nature, which you must apply to for the recommending your Prayers to the Divine Majesty. And as they had the Images of their Gods and Mediators to worship and fall down before; so will you also for the same Purpose have the Images of the Blessed Trinity, and the Virgin Mary, and the rest of the Saints.

It is true, the Pagans were mightily re-proved for these things, both in the Scripture and by the Primitive Christians. And they made several Defences and Apologies for their Practices. And the very same doth the Church of Rome now make for her Invocation of Saints and Image-Worship. But if the one were guilty of Idolatry there is little doubt but the other are so also: For there is not an Hair's Breadth difference between the Pleas and Apologies that each Party makes for itself.

Nay, it is a Religion that will engage you in a more unnatural Idolatry than ever the Pagans were guilty of. Cicero that was a Heathen himself, and knew as much of that Religion as any Man living did; yet affirms, that there was none so mad in any of the Religions of his Time as to pretend to eat his God. But yet this you must do in that Religion every time you Receive the Sacrament. And the Priest does it every Day when he says Mafs. For he eats that which himself and you all must worship. And you are taught to believe, that

De Nat.
Deor. l. 3.

that what you worship in the Mass is God, that is, the very Humanity of our Saviour united Personally to his Divinity.

It is true, in this Religion there are many Advantages and Conveniences pretended, that you cannot really have in the Religion you now profess. But look you to them, whether they will prove so in the Event.

The easie Ways they have to reconcile Sinners to God, even after the most vicious Life; by the Means of the Sacrament of Penance; as it is commonly Taught and Administred in that Church; together with the Liberty you may take in the Choice of such a Confessor as you think will be most favourable to your Case. Add to this, the Vertue of Indulgences; and Masses for the Dead. As also the Efficacy of Pilgrimages, Reliques and Holy Garments, &c. For the purging of Sins.

All these things put together may perhaps rid you of a great many Uneasinesses; and Scruples, and Pangs of Conscience; with which you might otherwise be troubled; and which would not be so easily cured in the Way that you are now in. There is little doubt but upon the commonly received Principles of that Religion, you may go to Heaven upon much easier Terms than you can upon ours: But yet for all that, in a Business of such Consequence as the Salvation of a Man's Soul is, it is good to make a serious

Enquiry, whether of the Two Ways is the safer.

But there is one Thing in this Religion which will not so easily go down with Englishmen: And, that is, That you cannot therein be any longer good Subjects to your Prince, than his Holiness will give you leave.

If his Majesty should be a Heretick (as it is certain his present Majesty is, in their Account) nay, in other Cases besides that of Heresie; the Pope has Power to Depose him, and Absolve his Subjects from their Allegiance. And that not only in the Judgment of their most famous Casuits, and by the Established Rules of their Canon Law, but by the Decree of an Infallible General Council: And it has been a frequent Practice of the Pope to make use of his Power in this Way.

Nay, in this Kingdom of England he needs not stay for such Pretences. For his Holiness (as appears upon Record) has declared, That this Kingdom is held in Fee of the Papacy; And that whoever wears the Crown here is their Vassal, and consequently may be turned out at pleasure:

What the Effects of these Doctrines have been, we of this Kingdom have had sufficient Experience since the Reformation; not to mention the Troubles they have given us in former Times. The Instances are so many and so very well known, that I need not Name them: But if they were all forgot, the late shall I say or the present Popish Plot for the taking away the Life of His Sacred Majesty, and subverting the Protestant Religion and the Established Government of this Kingdom, now brought to light; this alone, though all the other Instances were worn out of Memory, would sufficiently shew us what we are to expect from these Roman Principles, as to the Security either of our Prince, or our Liberties, or our Religion.

But blessed be God's Name, that this cursed Design has been hitherto defeated; and we are here to Praise him for it, and to Pray to him for a farther Discovery of it.

And blessed be his Name, that he hath given us this remarkable Evidence that he has not yet abandoned us, notwithstanding our manifold Provocations. Certainly this extraordinary Providence of God towards us, is one of the most comfortable Arguments that we can draw to ourselves, that God has yet some pity for this Nation; if we will but pity ourselves.

And lastly, Blessed be God's Name that this Mercy has already had this good Effect upon us, that we are awakened into a more lively Sense of the manifold Iniquity quity and Mischief and Danger of the Popish Religion and Party.

What is now further to be desired; but that the Issue of Things among us may be suitable to these Beginnings?

God has once more given this Nation a great Opportunity for the establishing her tottering Candlestick, and who knows whether ever the like will be offered again?

It therefore infinitely concerns all of us, especially you to whom the Managery of Publick Affairs is committed, to improve this present Opportunity to the good Purposes for which it was given; that so this great Mercy and Providence of God be not lost upon us.

Offences may come. And we may be disappointed. But as our Saviour said, Wo be to that Man by whom the Offence cometh. Such a Man will never be able to answer it either to God, or his Country, or at last to his own Conscience.

O may God so inspire you with the Spirit of Wisdom and Counsel; with Temper and Moderation; with a Spirit so disengaged from private Ends, and Interests; so unbiassed by particular Faction; and so wholly intent upon the Publick Good, that you may be the blessed Instruments of healing all the Distempers we groan under; and of deriving upon us those Blessings which we this Day Pray for.

D a

That

That by your Means Atheism and Contempt of Religion, as also Lewdness and Debauchery of all Kinds may be so discouraged that they shall not dare to appear with an open Face.

That by your Means a Stop may be put to the scandalous Schisms and Divisions that are among us; that if it be possible we may serve God with one Heart and with one Mind.

That by your Means, not only the Person of His Sacred Majesty, and the Rights of His Crown may be secured against all wicked Attempts, whether of Papists or others; But also that upon his Head the Crown may be so supported, and so flourish, that we may at least be in a Condition not to fear the Malice or the Power of any foreign Enemy.

Lastly, That by your Means as effectual Provision as possible may be made; both for the keeping out that foreign Religion, which, as we have seen, so little serves the Ends of Christianity, and so much deserves the Interest both of King and People: And for the more firm Establishment of the Protestant Religion of the Church of England: That so our present Candlestick may be continued to our Posterity, and they as well as we may have reason to bless God for you.

But in order to the procuring those great Blessings to the Kingdom, there is a Duty necessary to be performed by all of us in our private Capacities, which is here specified in the Text, viz. Repentance. I will come unto thee quickly, (says our Saviour) and will remove thy Candlestick out of its Place, except thou repent. Which Repentance, how it ought to be performed by us, is the Third and Last Thing I am to speak to.

But because I would not exceed the ordinary Limits of a Sermon, I shall only mention the Heads of those Things which upon this Occasion are proper to be insisted on.

If we would repent sincerely of our Sins, so as to do our Parts towards the Prevention of those Judgments that hang over our Heads, and the procuring those Blessings we stand in need of; It will be necessary that every one of us do deeply humble and afflict our Souls before God for our own Sins, the Sins which we have in Person committed; devoutly confessing them, and begging of God, that when he makes Inquisition for a National Guilt, he would not remember them, nor let the Publick suffer any thing upon our Account.

It is also necessary that we be duly sensible of the common Sins of others, so as to repent of them also. Lamenting before God the Corruptions of the Times: The publick fashionable Vices of the Age. This was the Spirit of David, who was con-cern'd for the Faults of others as well as his own; Rivers of Tears (saith he) run down my Eyes because Men keep not thy Law.

Nay, further, in order to a National Repentance, we are obliged to confess to God the Sins of our Forefathers, and pray for the Forgiveness of them also. What my own former private Sins are to me at present with respect to my Personal Capacity; the same are the Sins of our Fathers to us all, considered as a Nation or People. We are to repent as well of the past as of the present Sins of the Land. This is the Rule that God himself hath prescribed for a Publick Repentance. And for not putting that Rule in Practice, the People of the Jews, in our Saviour's Time, severely suffered. For upon the Men of that Generation (as our Saviour had threatned) was revenged all the righteous Blood shed in the Land, from the Blood of Abel, to the Blood of Zachariah. Though yet none of that Blood was shed by that Generation. Great Reason therefore have we at this Day seriously to put up to God that Petition which we so often repeat in our Litany, Remember not, Lord, our Offences, nor the Offences of our Forefathers; but spare us, good Lord, spare thy People whom thou hast redeemed with thy most precious Blood, and be not angry with us for ever.

But to make this Repentance such as it ought to be, there is further required a thorough thorough Change in our Hearts and Minds; so that as we confess and ask Pardon for the Faults of our Lives, we should also amend them. Without this all our ceremonious Humiliation will signify nothing.

Nay, we must not only reform ourselves, but do what we can in our Spheres towards the reforming of others. And every one of us might do a great deal, if we would; though it was but in this one Thing, in heartily discouraging scandalous and open Sins wherever we meet with them; so far as it may be done without Breach of Respect to our Superiors, or Forfeiture of common Prudence. If Vice had once an ill Name in the World, was once generally stigmatized with Reproach and Ignominy, it would quickly lose its Empire, and Thousands that are now the Slaves of it would become Profelytes to Vertue.

But further, If we truly fear the Judgment I have been speaking of, and by our Repentance would prevent it, let us make this particular Expression of that Repentance, viz. Let us set a great Value upon the Religion we at present enjoy: Let us in all our Actions shew a great Zeal and Concernment for it, and do what we can both towards the continuing and promoting it.

If every one of us in his way would but express half that Zeal, and Industry, and Diligence in the Cause of our Religion that we see our Adversaries do; we should probably, in a very little Time, see a quite different Face of Things:— And should not only put a Stop to their present Successes, but gain so much ground upon them as to cast them into despair of ever making a Conquest of this Nation. But here is the Misery, we are so confident and secure of the Goodness of our Cause, that we think it will support itself without any Help of ours. Let us in this Point learn Wisdom from our Enemies.

But especially, let us practice heartily those Vertues which our Religion peculiarly teaches, as opposed to Popery. Let us be Meek, and Gentle, and Long-Suffering, even to those that differ in Opinion from us. Let us hate all Tricks, and Devises, and Equivocations, both in our Words and our Carriage. Let us be constantly and inflexibly Loyal to our Prince, and let no Consideration in the World make us violate our Allegiance to him.

To all which, let us in the last Place add our earnest and constant Prayers to God, that he would be pleased to take pity of us: To avert the Judgments we are threatned with, and continue the Mercies we have hitherto enjoyed. That he would protect our Religion and make it to flourish more and more. That he would preserve our King, our Government, our Laws: And in order thereunto, that he would influence and direct all the Publick Councils, especially the great Council of the Nation now assembled in Parliament, that this Session of theirs may have a happy and a glorious Issue. Which God of his Mercy grant, &c.

Put them in mind to be subject to Principalities and Powers, to obey Magistrates.

YOU all know what Kind of Argument this Day calls for: For by the Design of keeping it, the Business that the Preacher hath to do, is to press Obedience and Subjection to the Government we live under, and to Preach against

against Faction and Rebellion. And accordingly it is prescribed in the Rubrick of this Day's Service, that if there be a Sermon at all, and not a Homily, it shall be upon this Argument.

It is very well that Authority hath taken care, that at some solemn Times we should Preach upon this Subject in a more solemn Manner. Because though it be as needful as any, yet there are some among us that think it a very improper Theme for the Pulpit. I must confess, I had an eye to this Suggestion, when I pitch'd upon these Words which I have now read to you: Because I think there is something to be observed in them which will effectually confute it.

St. Paul here lays his Charge upon Titus, That he should put the People that were under his Care in mind, to be subject to Principalities and Powers, and to obey Magistrates.

Two Things I would here consider. First, The Person that is order'd thus to put the People in mind: And Secondly, The Thing that he is to put them in mind of, which is, Subjection and Obedience to Principalities, and Powers, and Magistrates.

I begin with the first Thing, the Person to whom St. Paul writes this Epistle; and to whom he gives it in Charge,
That

That he should put the People in mind, to be subject.

Who was this Person? Why, it was Titus, an Ecclesiastic, a Bishop, a Preacher of the Gospel; not a Lay-man, not a Magistrate, but a pure Church-man. What can be more plainly gather'd from hence than this; That it is not foreign to a Clergy-man's Office to Preach Obedience and Subjection to the Government; but, on the contrary, a Part of his Function, a necessary Duty incumbent upon him to do it. If any Man affirm otherwise, he must either say, that St. Paul did not rightly instruct Titus in his Office, but enjoin'd him to do that which he had nothing to do with: Or he must shew that the Case of Titus was different from that of the Ministers of the Gospel at this Day. Neither of which Things can, I believe, be easily made out.

And yet into such Times are we fallen, that it is taken ill, by many, that Ministers should in their Pulpit-Discourses meddle with these Matters. I must confess I think, that of all Men, it most concerns a Minister of Religion not to be a Busy-body, or a Medler in other Mens Matters: For in truth, he hath Work enough to do of his own; and such Kind of Work too, as, let him behave himself as inoffensively as he can, will create him Difficulties and Enemies enough. And there-therefore it would be very imprudent in him to usurp other Mens Provinces; and to burn his Fingers where he needs not: Especially, considering, that the Success of his Labours and Endeavours among the People doth in a great Measure depend upon the good Liking they have of him.

But what is it that gives Offence? Or what is it that renders this Argument we are speaking of so improper a Subject for a Clergy-man to treat of? Why, several Things are pretended, and I shall name some of them.

First, It is said, that the Work of a Clergy-man, is to instruct Men in Christ's Religion, to preach against Vice and Sin, and to preach up Holiness and good Life, and mutual Love and Charity: But what has he to do with State-Affairs, as Matters of Government are?

I Answer, He hath nothing, indeed, to do with them: But his only Work is to make Men good Christians, by endeavouring to possess them with a hearty Belief of our Saviour's Doctrines and Promises, and persuading them to a Conformity in their Lives to his Precepts. This is our proper Work, and this is that we ought to attend to, all the Days of our Life; and with Government and State-Affairs we ought not to meddle, in our Sermons especially.

But

But then, after all this, it doth not follow, but that we are all bound, as we have Occasion, to Preach up Loyalty and Obedience to our Governours. For this is no State-Affair, but an Affair of the Gospel. We cannot instruct Men in Christ's Religion, without instructing them in this.

If, indeed, it was an indifferent Thing to a Man's Christianity, or to his Salvation, whether he was a good or a bad Subject; then, indeed, it would be as indifferent to a Preacher, whether he insisted on these Things to the People: But it is not so.

One great Branch of Christian Holiness, as it is declared in the New Testament, is; That every Man demean himself quietly, and peaceably, and obediently to the Government he lives under; and that not only for Wrath, or Fear of Punishment, but also for Conscience-sake. And this is made as necessary a Condition of going to Heaven, as any other particular Vertue is. And therefore if we will instruct Men in Christ's Religion, and in the indispensable Points of Holiness required thereby, we must instruct them in this also.

One great Vice and damnable Sin, that the Religion of our Lord has caution'd against, is the Sin of Factionness and Rebellion. And therefore, if it be our Duty to declare against the Sins and Vices that are contrary to Christianity, it is our Duty to declare and caution against this also.
are

Lastly, We do readily grant, that a great Part of our Office consists in most affectionately recommending and pressing the Necessity of mutual Love and Charity. But if this be necessary, is it not more so, to recommend and press Obedience to Authority, without which, mutual Love and Charity cannot possibly subsist? That being the common Ligament of them; and take away that, we should be no better than Bears and Tygers one to another.

But it is said, in the Second Place, That Preachers ought not to meddle with these Points, because they are not competent Judges of them: They do not know the Measures and Limits of Loyalty and Disloyalty, of being a good, and a bad subject: These depending altogether upon the Constitution of the Government we live under; and the determining of them belongs to the Civil Courts, and not to their Profession.

To this I Answer, That in all those Instances, wherein this Argument falls under the Cognizance and Determination of Parliaments, or Judges, or Lawyers, we do not pretend to meddle with it. And if any Man do, let him answer for himself. All that we pretend to, is to press the plain, general, indispensable Duties of Obedience to Laws, and of Peaceableness, and Subjection jection to the Higher Powers, which Christ and his Apostles have every where taught in the Bible.

If, indeed, a Preacher should in the Pulpit presume to give his Judgment about the Management of Publick Affairs; or to lay down Doctrines, as from Christ, about the Forms and Models of Kingdoms or Common-wealths; or to adjust the Limits of the Prerogative of the Prince, or of the Liberties of the Subject in our present Government: I say, if a Divine should meddle with such Matters as these in his Sermons, I do not know how he can be excused from the just Censure of meddling with Things that nothing concern him. This is, indeed, a practising in State-Matters, and is usurping an Office that belongs to another Profession, and to Men of another Character. And I should account it every whit as undecent in a Clergy-man to take upon him to deal in these Points; as it would be for him, to determine Titles of Land, in the Pulpit, which are in Dispute in Westminster-Hall.

But what is this to the Preaching Obedience and Subjection to the Establish'd Government? Let meddling with the Politics be as odious as you please in a Clergy-man; yet sure it must not only be allow'd to him, but be thought his Duty, to exhort all Subjects to be faithful to their Prince, to live peaceably

under his Government, and to obey all the Laws that are made by Just Authority: And even where they cannot obey them, yet to submit, and to raise no Disturbance to the Publick upon that Account: And this is the great Thing which we say Clergy-men have to do in this Matter.

We meddle not with the Politicks; we meddle not with Prerogative or Property; we meddle not with the Disputes and Controversies of Law that may arise about these Matters: But we Preach a Company of plain Lessons of Peaceableness and Fidelity, and Submission to our Rulers; such as the Law of Nature teaches; such as both Christ and his Apostles did preach in all Places wherever they came; and such as will at this Day hold in all the Governments of the World, whether they be Kingdoms or Common-wealths.

And if at any time we make a particular Application of these General Rules to our own Establish'd Government, it is only in such Instances as are plainly of the Essence of our National Constitution. In such Instances as are plainly contain'd in the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and those other Tests, which, for the Security of the Government, the Law hath taken care that Subjects shall Swear to, and consequently must be thought obliged both to understand and practise them. And how can it be an Invasion of another Man's Office, to Preach and Insist upon such Things as these? No, certainly; what it is the Duty of every Subject both to understand and practise in order to his Salvation, that, without doubt, it is the Duty of their Pastors to put them in mind of.

But Thirdly, It is said further, That Preachers cannot engage in these Arguments, but they will of Necessity side with some Party or Faction among us; Now they should have nothing to do with Parties or Factions.

To this I Answer, That to be on the Side of the Established Government, and to endeavour to maintain that, is not to be a Favourer of Parties and Factions. But they are the Factions, They are the Setters up, or Abettors of Parties, who endeavour to destroy, or unsettle, or disparage, or in the least to hurt and weaken the Government, and the Laws, as they are established; let the Principles upon which they go, or the Pretences they make, be what they will. So that a Minister, by Preaching Obedience and Subjection, doth not, in the least, make himself of any Party; but, on the contrary, he sets himself against all Parties: And so he ought to do. For his Business is, to be on the Side of the Government, as it is by Law Established; and as vigorously as in him lies, in such Ways as are proper for his Function, to oppose all those that would either secretly undermine it, or openly assault it: In a Word, all those that would make any Change or Innovation in it, (by whatever Names they are discriminated) by any other Means or Methods, than what the Law of the Land, and the Nature of the Constitution, doth allow.

And thus much of the First Thing I took Notice of in the Text, viz. the Person to whom the Charge is here given. That he should put the People in Mind. I now come, in the Second Place, to the Thing he was to put them in Mind of, and that is, to be subject to Principalities and Powers, and to obey Magistrates.

And here Two Things are to be enquired into; First, Who are those Principalities and Powers, and Magistrates, to whom we are to be subject, and whom we are to obey. And Secondly, wherein consists that Subjection and Obedience that we are to give them.

As for the First of these, Who are the Principalities, and Powers, and Magistrates? Why, certainly by these Words are meant the Supreme Civil Governours of every Nation; and under them, their subordinate Officers. Let the Form of Government, in any Country, be what it will; in whomsoever the Sovereign Authority is lodged, (whether in one, or in many) they are the Principalities and Powers to whom we are to be subject; and those that are Commission'd and Deputed to exercise Authority under them, are the Magistrates whom we are to obey.

St. Peter, in the Second Chapter of his First Epistle, doth thus express them, (alluding, no doubt, to the Government of the Roman State under which he lived, which was then Monarchical) Submit your selves, saith he, ωδον ανδραπων χριστου, to every Humane Constitution, for the Lord's Sake: Whether it be to the King, as Supreme; or unto the Governours, as unto them that are sent by him—— for so is the Will of God. Upon which Words of his, the Homily of our Church, appointed to be read on this Day, doth thus gloss.

“ St. Peter doth not say, Submit your “ selves unto me, as Supreme Head of “ the Church. Neither saith he, Sub“ mit your selves, from Time to Time,
 “ to my Successors in Rome. But he saith,
 “ Submit your selves unto your King,
 “ your Supreme Head, and to those that “ he appointeth in Authority under him.
 “ This is God's Ordinance, this is God's “ Holy Will, that the whole Body in every “ Realm, and all the Members and Parts “ of the same, shall be subject to their “ Head, their King.

As

As for the Subjection and Obedience that is to be paid to these Principalities and Powers, which is the other Thing I am to enquire into, it consists of a great many Particulars.

It implies in it, for Instance, That we should give all Honour, Respect and Reverence to their Persons, looking upon them (which really they are) as God's Vicegerents upon Earth.

That we should not rashly censure their Actions, or the Administration of their Government.

That we should at no hand despise them, or speak evil of them, remembering the Character that St. Jude gives of those that despise Dominions, and speak Evil of Dignities.

That as we should make Prayers, and Supplications and Intercessions, and giving of Thanks for all Men; so more especially for them, and those that are put in Authority under them, as St. Paul teaches us.

That we should pay them the Tributes and Customs that are due to them, as the same Apostle expresses it; that is, the Expences we are legally Taxed at, towards the Support of their Government.

That we should, according to our Power, maintain their Jura Majestatis, the Rights and Prerogatives, belonging, by the Constitution, to their Office and Dignity.

That we should assist and defend them against their Enemies.

That we should behave our selves peaceably and modestly in our particular Vocations, endeavouring to make their Government as easie and as happy as we can, but at no hand to invade any Publick Office that belongs not to us.

In a Word, That we should yield Obedience to all their Laws. And in case it ever happen that we cannot with a safe Conscience obey, there we are patiently to suffer the Penalties of our Disobedience: But by no means either to affront their Persons, or to disturb their Government, by raising or partaking in any Tumult, or Insurrection, or Rebellion.

All this that I have now named, is contained in that Duty of Subjection and Obedience which we are here bid to pay to Principalities and Powers, as might easily be shewn, as to every Particular: But I will not tire you, by running through all these Heads, and therefore shall only desire leave to speak a little to the two last Things I have now mentioned; both because they are the most General, and do in a manner comprehend the Rest; and because they seem principally intended in the Text I am now discoursing of. Put them in mind (saith St. Paul) to be subject, and put them in mind to obey. In the one Phrase seems to be intimated the Duty of Active Obedience to the Laws and Orders of our Governours: In the other Phrafe, our Submission where we cannot obey.

And First of all, As for the Business of Active Obedience, (for it is proper to begin with that first) all that is needful to be said for the clearing of it, may be comprised in these Four following Propositions.

1st, That the standing Laws of every Country are the Rule of the Subjects Obedience, and not merely the Will of the Prince.

Where, indeed, the Legislative and the Executive Power are both in one hand, (as it is in those we call Absolute Monarchies) there the Will of the Prince stands for Law. But where People are so happy as to live under a Legal Establishment, as ours is, there the Publick Laws must govern and steer their Actions, and not the Prince's private Pleasure. So that tho' the King can do no Wrong, (as our Maxim is) yet the Subject is answerable for every thing he doth against Law, even when he doth it by the King's Command.

2^{dly}, Whatever Laws are made by Just Authority, whether in Civil Matters, or in Matters relating to Religion, if they be not contrary to God's Laws, there the Subject is bound in Conscience to obey them, even tho' he apprehends they are inconvenient.

I own, indeed, that the Matter of some Laws may be of so small Importance, that a Man shall not need much to charge his Conscience with the Observance of them: It being enough that he submit to the Penalty, in case of Transgression: And, perhaps, the Government never meant to extend their Obligation farther. But for all that, it is in the Power of the Legislative, when there is reason, to bind our Consciences to Obedience, as well as to award Punishments to our Disobedience. And the Reason of this is evident, because we are bound by the Laws of God, who hath the Supreme Dominion over our Consciences, to obey our Lawful Governours in Lawful Things.

Nay, I say farther, (which is my Third Proposition,) that even where we doubt of the Lawfulness of their Commands, we are bound to obey; so long as we only doubt of their Lawfulness, but are not persuaded that they are unlawful.

For certainly the Authority of our Governours ought to over-rule any Man's private Doubts. There is all the Reason in the World that it should do so: And there is no good Reason to be urged to the contrary.

Pray, what is it we mean, when we say, that a Man doubts concerning a Thing, whether it be lawful or no? Is it not this? That his Judgment is kept suspended between

between equal Probabilities on both Sides of a Question. He is enclined by some Reasons to believe that the Thing is lawful; and he is inclined, by other Reasons, to believe that the Thing is unlawful. And these Reasons do appear so equally probable to him on both Sides, that he doth not know how to determine himself: He doth not know which way he should frame a Judgment about the Point in question.

This is the Notion of a Doubt. Now in such a Case as this, when Authority interposeth, and declareth it self on one Side; and pronounceth not only that the Thing is lawful to be done, but also, that it will have it done; and accordingly lays its Commands upon the Man to do it: I say, if there be not so much Weight in Authority as to turn the Scale in such a Case as this, and to oblige a Man to act in Obedience to it; it is the lightest Thing in the World, and signifies very little as to the influencing the Affairs of Mankind.

But, Fourthly and Lastly; If the Matter be out of doubt: If a Man be really convinced that the Thing which Authority Commands him, is not lawful in itself, but is contradictory to the Laws of God: In that Case he must not do the Thing commanded; on the contrary, he is bound to forbear the Practice of it.

If any Human Law, let it be made by the best Authority upon Earth, should

command us to believe any Point in Matters of Faith which we are persuaded to be contrary to the Revelation of Christ and his Apostles; or should command us to profess and declare our Belief of any Matter whatsoever, tho' never so indifferent, when yet we did not really believe it; or, lastly, should oblige us to the doing of any Action which we did in our own Conscience judge to be a Transgression of a Divine Command: I say, in none of these Cases are we to yield Obedience to the Law, by what Authority soever it was Enacted. And the Reason is plain: We must always chuse to obey God rather than Men. Where God's Law hath commanded us, there no Human Law can absolve us from the Obligation. Where God's Law hath forbidden us, there no Human Law can lay Obligations upon us.

And it is the same Thing as to our Practice, that we believe God's Law hath ty'd us up, as if it had really done so. So that, whether we are really in the right, or in the wrong, as to our Persuasions in these Matters, we must not act against them; because we must not act against our Consciences. Only this we are to remember, that it extremely concerns us rightly to inform our Consciences in these Matters where Human Laws have interposed their Authority.

For

For if we make a wrong Judgment of Things, and upon that account deny our Obedience to the Laws, where we should have given it; though we ought not to act against our Conscience, as I said, (nay, it would be a great Sin in us if we should,) yet, on the other Side, we are not to be excused for disobeying the Commands of Authority, where we might lawfully have obeyed them; unless it should prove that it was through no Fault of ours that our Judgments were misinformed.

And thus much concerning my First Head, that of Obedience to Laws: I now come to the other, that of Subjection; as that Word implies patient Submission to our Governours, where we cannot actively comply with what they require of us.

And this is that Doctrine of Passive Obedience which of late hath had so ill a Sound among many of us: But I dare say, for no other reason, but because it may have been by some misrepresented. For wherever it is rightly understood, it can give Offence to none but to such as are really disaffected to the Government, and do desire Alterations.

That there is such a Submission due from all Subjects to the Supreme Authority of the Place where they live, as shall tie up their Hands from Opposing or Resisting

it by Force, is evident from the very Nature and Ends of Political Society. And I dare say, there is not that Country upon Earth, let the Form of their Government be what it will, (Absolute Monarchy, Legal Monarchy, Aristocracy, or Commonwealth) where this is not a Part of the Constitution. Subjects must obey passively, where they cannot obey actively: Otherwise the Government would be precarious, and the Publick Peace at the Mercy of every Malecontent, and a Door would be set open to all the Insurrections, Rebellions and Treasons in the World.

Nor is this only a State Doctrine, but the Doctrine also of Jesus Christ, and that a necessary, indispensable one too; as sufficiently appears from those famous Words of St. Paul, Rom. xiii. 1, 2. which are so plain, that they need no Comment: Let every Soul (saith he) be subject to the Higher Powers, for there is no Power but of God; and the Powers that be, are ordained of God. Who-soever therefore resisteth the Power, resisteth the Ordinance of God; and they that resist, shall receive to themselves Damnation. So that so long as this Text stands in our Bibles, the Doctrine of Non-Resistance, or Passive Obedience, must be of Obligation to all Christians.

But then, after I have said this, care must be taken that this General Doctrine

be not misapplied in particular Countries. Though Non-Resistance, or Passive Obedience, be a Duty to all Subjects, and under all Governments, yet it is not expressed the same way in all Places; but both the Objects and the Instances of it do vary in different Nations, according to the different Models of their Government.

To speak this as plainly as I can. As the Laws of the Land are the Measures of our Active Obedience; so are also the same Laws the Measures of our Submission. And as we are not bound to obey but where the Laws and Constitution require our Obedience; so neither are we bound to submit but as the Laws and Constitution do require our Submission.

Taking now this to be the true stating of the Doctrine of Passive Obedience, as I verily believe it is, I do not see what colour of Reason can be offered against it. Sure I am, the common Pretence, that it tends to introduce Tyranny, and Arbitrary Government, and to make People Slaves, is quite out of Doors. For you see it makes no Princes Absolute, where, by the Constitution, they were not so before. Nor doth it destroy any Liberty of the Subjects that they were before in Possession of. All that it doth, is to preserve and secure the National Settlement in the same Posture, and upon the same

Foot,

Foot, in and upon which it is already Established. And this is so true, that there is not a Common-wealth in the World so free, but that these Doctrines of Non-Resistance, and Passive Obedience, must for ever be taught there, as necessary even for the Preservation of their Liberties.

As for what this Doctrine imports among us, and in our Constitution, or how far it is to be extended or limited, it belongs not to me to determine. But thus much the Occasion of this Day's Meeting will not only warrant me, but oblige me to say upon this Head, and it is all the Application I shall now make, namely,

That by all the Laws of this Land, the Person of the KING is Sacred and Inviolable; and that to Attempt his Life in any Way, or upon any Pretence, always was and is High-Treason. And if so, what are we to think of that Fact which was on this Day committed upon the Person of our late Sovereign, of Blessed Memory, King Charles I. taking it with all its Circumstances? Why certainly, how slight soever some People among us may make of it, it was a most Barbarous Murther; a Violation of the Laws of God and Man, a Scandal to the Protestant Religion, and a Reproach to the People of England; whilst the impious Rage of a Few, stands im-imputed by our Adversaries to the whole Nation. All this I may say of this Fact; for it is no more than is said of it by the Lords and Commons of England, in that Act of Parliament, which appoints the keeping of this Day as a perpetual Fast.

I am sensible how uneasie some are at the mentioning of this; and how gladly they would have both the Thing, and the Memorial of it, forgot among us. I must confess, I could wish so too, provided we were sure that God had forgot it; so, I mean, forgot it, as that we were no longer obnoxious to his Judgments, upon the Account of that Innocent Blood: And provided likewise, in the Second Place, that those Factions, Republican Principles which have once over-turn'd our Government, and brought an Excellent Prince to an unhappy End, were so far forgot among us, as that there was no Danger from them, of ever having this or the like Tragedy acted again in our Nation. But so long as we have Apprehensions from either of these Things, so long it will be fit for us to remember this Fact, and this Day; and both to implore the Mercy of God, that neither the Guilt of that Sacred and Innocent Blood, nor those other Sins by which God was provoked to deliver up both us and our King into the Hands of cruel and unreasonable Men, may, at any Time hereafter, be visited upon us, or our Posterity: And likewise wise to suffer our selves to be put in mind of that Duty, which, by St. Paul's Authority, I have been all this while insisting on, namely, to be subject to Principalities and Powers, and to obey Magistrates: Or, if you will rather take it in the Words of Solomon, Prov. xxiv. 21. To fear the Lord and the King, and not to meddle with them that are given to Change.

St. JAMES's Chapel;

On Palm-Sunday, March 24. 1⁶⁰⁰/₇₀₀.

St. J O H N xx. 29.

—Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

TH E S E are our Saviour's Words to St. Thomas after his Resurrection. The Occasion of them was this: The other Disciples had assured Thomas, that our Saviour was risen from the Dead, and that he had in Person appeared to them. Thomas would not believe this upon their Report, but required farther Evidence. Except (saith he) I shall see in his Hands the Print of the Nails, and thrust my Hand into his Side, I will not believe. The next time that our Saviour appeared to them, Thomas was in the Company, and then he was pleased to give him such a Proof of his Resurrection as he himself had stood upon; for he calls upon him, and bids him reach forth his Finger, and behold his Hands where the Print of the Nails was, and reach forth his Hand, and thrust it into his Side, and after this, not to be faithless, but believing. Hereupon Thomas owns himself fully convinced, and in Token thereof, he answered and said unto him, My Lord, and my God. Then come in the Words of the Text: Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, Because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

In which Words, as our Saviour tacitly reproves Thomas for his Incredulity, in not believing a Matter of Fact well attested, unless he himself saw it; so he lays down an universal Proposition for the Encouragement of all Mankind in future Ages of the World, to believe in him, though they had not seen him.

Our Saviour knew very well, that this was to be the Case of far the greatest Part that were to believe in him. For it was only to the Men of that Age in which he lived, and of that Country where he conversed, to whom it was given to hear from his own Mouth his Divine Doctrines, and to see with their Eyes the Proofs that he gave of his Divine Mission, particularly that Illustrious one of his Resurrection from the Dead. But for all the succeeding Generations of Men, they were to believe without seeing. Their Faith was not to be grounded on the Evidence of their own Senses, but on the Testimony of those that had had that Evidence. And therefore for the obliging and encouraging all Mankind, in the Ages to come, to embrace his Religion upon such Motives and such Evidence as this, he pronounceth these Words, Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

I doubt not but that all Christians are fully satisfied both of the Truth and Reason of this Proposition of our Saviour, and are convinced that they have Motives enow to oblige them to believe in him, and to own his Religion; though they never saw, nor were capable of seeing the Original Proofs and Evidence he gave for the Truth of it. Indeed, if it were otherwise, none of us at this Day could be Christians upon rational Grounds. But this Doctrine will not pass among all Men. On the contrary, by several, their not Seeing, is made the great, if not the only Pretence, for their not Believing. This being so; I hope it will not be Time mispent, spent, if I endeavour to answer this Plea of theirs ; and, I think, I cannot to better Purpose discourse upon this Text, than by doing so.

The Case is this. Some there are among us that endeavour to run down all Reveal'd Religion. If you ask them, whether then they are for any Religion at all? They will tell you, Yes ; they are for that which Natural Reason teacheth. We wish they were in good Earnest when they say this: For then we should hope to be soon all of a Mind. For we cannot doubt but that whosoever doth sincerely believe all that Natural Reason will teach him about Religion, and doth seriously endeavour to frame his Life accordingly ; such a one will not fail to embrace Christianity, whenever the Doctrines of our Saviour, and the Proofs he gave for the Truth of them, are fairly represented to him. But, in truth, these Mens loose way, both of discoursing, and of living, renders it suspicious, that their Profession of Natural Religion is not very sincere ; but only for the sheltering them from the Imputation of Atheism, and serving other secular Ends. For such a Scheme of Natural Religion have they framed to themselves, as will not much trouble their Consciences, let them live how they will. But now the Christian Religion (which is that they chiefly oppose under the Name of Revealed Religion) is a more stubborn Thing, and will not so easily be brought to comply with their Humours and Inclinations. And that we fear, though they are loth to own it, is the secret Reason of their Grudge against it. The Gospel of Christ doth not favour such Sort of Principles as these Men have taken up, nor such a Kind of Life as they are engaged in; but, on the contrary, severely declares against them. And therefore some colourable Reason must be found out, for the setting aside the Authority of this Gospel, which is so contradictory to their Interests. But how is this to be come by?

To object against the Sufficiency of the Proof that our Saviour gave to the World of his being sent from God to teach this Religion to Mankind, that there is no colour for: For they are sensible, that if his History, as it is related in the Gospel, be admitted to be a true History, so that one may depend upon the Matters of Fact there recorded concerning him: If this, I say, be admitted, it cannot be denied, but that our Saviour gave abundant Evidence, that he was what he pretended to be, the Son of God, and the great Prophet whom all Men were to be obedient to, if they meant to be saved.

Since therefore they cannot fasten upon this, they pitch upon another Method.

They endeavour to run down all our Evidence for the Truth of Christ's Religion, by making a Difference between seeing our Saviour's Miracles, and reading them in a Book. They will allow, that if any Man heard or saw Jesus Christ speaking those Things, or doing those Things, which are recorded of him; such a Man would have sufficient Reason to induce him to be his Disciple: But they deny that they have any such Reason to be so, because they neither heard nor saw any of those Things; nor are they convinced that such Things were ever done. They reproach us, that when they desire of us a Proof of the Christian Religion, all the Answer they can obtain of us is, that they must go to such a Book (which we call the Bible) and that will satisfy them. But why should they pin their Faith upon any Book in the World? This is what they urge for their Infidelity.

This now being the State of the Controversy between Us and several of the Unbelievers among us, you see it turns upon this single Point that is now before us; namely, Whether a Man that does not see, may not have sufficient Reason to believe at many hundred Years distance? Or more particularly thus; Whether we in these Days, who never saw our Saviour, nor his Miracles, (particularly that of his Resurrection, with Reference to which these Words were spoken) have not abundant Reason to believe in him, upon the Testimony of those that did see all these Things. We say we have. They say we have not. Here therefore we join Issue.

Now for the making good our Side of the Question, I proceed by these Steps.

In the First Place, We lay it down as a Principle, and, I suppose, every body will agree to it; That if Jesus Christ and his Apostles, when they first Preached the Gospel, did give sufficient Proof and Evidence that what they Preached was from God: And likewise, if both the Doctrine they Preached, and the Proof and Evidence they gave for it, be faithfully transmitted to us; and with such Certainty likewise, that we cannot have any reasonable Doubt that it is so transmitted: Then, I say, we can have no reason in the Earth to complain, that we want Evidence for the Truth of the Gospel. I do not say yet, that we have as strong Proof, as if we had seen or heard those Things ourselves: But, I say, we have sufficient Proof to convince any reasonable unbiaſſed Man: This, I presume, no body will deny, and it is all that we ask at present.

I.

In the Second Place; I believe none will deny, that what was once really spoken, or what was once really done, may be truly and faithfully put into Writing. And it is possible, likewise, that those Writings may come so well attested, to them that live many Ages after those Things were spoken, or done, that none in any Age can reasonably doubt that they give a true and faithful Account of the Things therein reported to be done or taught. I say, I believe, none will deny this; for if it be not admitted, we can give no Credit to any History that was written; nor, consequently, to any Matter of Fact that was done in former Ages. It therefore will, I hope, be granted, that both the Doctrines of our Saviour, and his Proofs of them, might, in this way, if God so pleased, be so faithfully transmitted to Posterity, that future Ages might certainly come to the Knowledge of them.

III.

In the Third Place we say, That it is obvious to all Mankind, that if ever there was any Affair in the World, wherein the Providence of God was concerned, that there should be a faithful Conveyance of it made to all Generations to come; and carrying the Marks of its own Credibility, this Affair of the Gospel of Christ was such a one; because the Importance of it to all the Children of Men was such, that their Salvation or Damnation, to the End of the World, did depend upon the Belief of it, if the Author

Author of this Gospel delivered a true Doctrine. And therefore we may certainly conclude, that if what Christ taught at the first, was from God; God would take care that what he taught, together with sufficient Proof of the Truth of it, should be conveyed to all the Ages of the World. And if all this was to be contained in a Book; we may likewise be assured, that Book should come to us, with such Evidence of its being true, that we could have no reasonable Suspicion concerning it. We are sure God's Providence hath taken care that Writings of an ancients Date than the Gospel, that are of infinitely less Consequence to Mankind, should come down to us without any Suspicion of Imposture: And can it be imagined then, his Providence should be unconcerned, in preserving and bringing safe to our Hands, the Records of a Thing, by the Belief or Denial of which, the Eternal State of Men in the other World is to be concluded?

In the Fourth Place, having laid these Foundations, we advance a Step higher. IV. It is certain, that there was a timely and a faithful Record of all the Things that Jesus Christ taught, in order to Salvation, and of all the Proofs he gave for the Truth and Divinity of his Doctrine: And this Record is contained in the Books of the New Testament.

That

That this is true Matter of Fact, we have all the Proof that a Thing of this Nature is capable of. These Books were written, either by Men that were Eye and Ear Witnesses of our Saviour's Miracles, and Doctrine, and Conversation; or by such as Conversed with those that were. This appears not only from the Writings themselves, which carry in them all the Marks of their being written by Persons so qualified; but also from the constant Tradition that hath in all Ages gone in the World, about the Authors of these Writings. And you may with as much, or more reason doubt, that those Writings among us, which go under the Name of Cicero, or Cæsar, or Seneca; or any other most unquestioned Author, were none of theirs, but forged since their Times; than you can doubt that the Gospels of St. Matthew, Mark, and John, and Luke's, both Gospel and Acts of the Apostles, and St. Paul's Epistles, were not writ by those Authors, or in the Age they pretend to be. I say, there is a great deal more Reason to doubt of that, than there is of this: Because we have not only all the Proofs of the Genuineness of those Writings, that can be given for any other Writings, which are the most unquestioned in the World; but this over and above, which is compatible to none but these; namely, That the Matter of these Writings tings is of such a Nature, that all Mankind were concerned to detect the Fraud and the Forgery of them, if there had been any: But yet they have always passed under the Names they bear at this Day; nay, and, in every Age, from the first Publishing of them, we have Authentick Authorities, in a continued Succession to vouch for them.

Well, but supposing these Men to be the Authors of these Writings; yet how can we depend upon the Truth of what they have reported?

In Answer to this, I say, in the Fifth Place, Let any Man read them, and then speak from his Conscience, Whether he does not think that these Men were in good Earnest, and did really write according to their own inward Sense? And yet the Matters they wrote were such, as it was not possible they could be deceived about them, because they were all plain Matters of Fact; Things which their Eyes and Ears were witnesses of. But that is not all: They who lived in those Days, and had full Opportunities of examining the Truth of what they had written, gave Testimony to them; since they built their Faith upon the Matters of Fact they had delivered. If therefore you suppose these Writers to be sincere honest Men, it is certain that what they recorded concerning our Lord Jesus, and his his Doctrines, and his Actions, must be true. On the other Side, if you suppose them to have had Designs of imposing upon the World with a false Story; you must, at the same Time, suppose a great Number of People (of whom there is no ground for such a Suspicion) to be perfect Fools or Madmen, who gave so much Credit to all that Matter which they related concerning our Saviour, that they laid down their Lives to attest the Truth of it.

I know nothing to be said against this, unless it be, That though they could not well be supposed to be mistaken in the Matters of Fact which they relate concerning our Saviour, yet they might in the Matter of his Doctrines. These they might misrepresent, and consequently their Writings ought not to be of that Authority with us, as that we should be bound to believe all that they say. But to this I give a very short Answer; If we do admit them to be true Reporters of Matters of Fact, we must also of Necessity admit them to be true Reporters, nay, I say more, Infallible Reporters of our Saviour's Doctrine; so as that their Declarations of it must for ever conclude all Christians. And the Reason is this: The Authors of these Writings were either Apostles, or Apostolick Men, as has been said before; and it is one of the Matters of Fact reported in these Writings, that our Saviour did so assist these Men with his Holy Spirit, that they were enabled faithfully and infallibly to Preach that Doctrine to others which he had delivered to them. Now, if we be sure they were inspired in what they Preached, we may be as much assured they were inspired in putting what they Preached into writing, since it was the same Doctrine that they Preached and that they Wrote; and, especially, since after it was written it was to remain to all succeeding Generations, and to be a Rule of Mens Faith so long as the World should last. And further, We are sure that all the Christians of those Days did look upon those Writings to have a Stamp of Divine Authority upon them, and distinguished them from all other Human Compositions. And to Evidence this, they made these Writings to be the Standard of their Belief; the Measure by which they tried all Opinions and Doctrines in Religion: So that whatever was not found in these Scriptures, was not accounted as necessary to Salvation; and whatever was found disagreeing from these Scriptures, was rejected as an Innovation, or an Error in Christianity: And of this we have sufficient Evidence from Antiquity.

Well, but how shall we know whether these Scriptures be faithfully transmitted down to us? How do we know
but

but that they may have been corrupted since the Time they were written, and made to speak different Things now, from what they did at the first? This is the last Question upon this Argument; and, VI. in Answer to it, I say, in the Sixth Place,

If the Providence of God, as I told you before, was ever concerned to preserve any Writings from being depraved or corrupted; it was certainly more especially concerned to do it, as to the Writings we are now speaking of, they being of such vast Importance to all the Generations of Mankind. But I do not leave the Matter so. There is Evidence of Fact as well as Reason to be offered in this Case.

Let the Books of the New Testament, as we now have them, be tried by the severest Rules of Criticism: Let the Copies both Ancient and Modern, which are extant of them, be compared: Let the several Versions of them likewise that were made, in the earliest Times, be examined: Lastly, Let all the Ecclesiastical Writers, from the Beginning of Christianity to this Day, who have either commented upon them, or proved any Doctrine from them, or but occasionally quoted them in their Writings, be searched into; it will appear, by all these Ways of Tryal, that our Scriptures are the same at this Day, that they were at the Beginning, without any material Difference.

Indeed,

Indeed, considering the Multitude of Copies that were taken of these Books, and the several Translations that were made of them into other Languages, even shortly after the Time they were first published; we cannot imagine it possible, that, in After-ages, any thing could be foisted into them, to serve the Turn of any Party, but the Imposture would have been presently discovered. And accordingly we find, that when any Attempts of this kind have been made, there were not wanting those who took care to detect and expose them.

I do not, when I say this, deny that there are many Differences and various Readings to be met with, in the ancient Copies of these Books, occasioned by the Negligence or Mistakes of Transcribers: Nay, and some few Passages may be wanting, in some Copies, that are found in others. But then I desire it may be observed, that these Differences are of such small Moment, that it is of no Importance to the Christian Faith, which of the Readings be right, and which of them be wrong; for they all agree in all the Matters which concern either our Saviour's Doctrines, or his Precepts, or the Proofs he gave of his Divine Mission: And farther Agreement than this, I think, none needs to desire.

Indeed, if slight and verbal Differences, in Copies, be a good Argument against the Genuineness of a Writing, we have no genuine Writing of any ancient Author at this Day; for the same Thing has happened to all old Books whatsoever, that have been often transcribed: And to suppose that it should be otherwise, in the Books of the Scripture, is to suppose, that God ought in every Age, as immediately and infallibly to guide the Pen of every Transcriber of them, as he did the Minds of their first Authors.

To make now a little Reflection on what I have said about the Scriptures of the New Testament. It is urged by our Deists, as a very hard Thing, that whereas, when the Gospel was first preached, Men had Opportunities of being convinced by their Senses of the Truth of it; (or, at least, it is pretended they had such Opportunities) we now are only referred to a Book that gives us an Account of these Matters: Why, I desire to know, what other Way they would have had an Account of them but by Books? Would they have had our Saviour to come down from Heaven every Fifty or Threescore Years, and to Preach the same Doctrine, and confirm it by the same Miracles to the Men of that Generation, that he once did among the Jews? Yet this it must be supposed necessary for him to do, if Men cannot

cannot otherwise be convinced of the Truth of his Religion, but by their Senses: Nay, that would not be enough, he must not only publish his Doctrine, and repeat his Miracles to every Age, but to every individual Man of every Age; otherwise all Men had not Opportunity of being convinced by their Senses, and, consequently, could not, upon reasonable Grounds, believe in him. But, if this Supposition be absurd, as it certainly is; then we must be content (and there is all the Reason in the World we should be so) with that Sort of Evidence for the Truth of his Gospel, that other Matters of Fact, done at a great Distance of Time from us, are capable of: That is to say, Authentick Witnesses of them at the first; and the Testimony of those Witnesses faithfully transmitted down to Posterity. And how any Testimony can be more faithfully transmitted, than by the Way of Writing, let them shew us, if they can.

And then, as for the Books or Writings that we refer you to in this Case, we ask no more for the gaining Credit to them, than only that it may be seriously considered, of what Sort they are; and what Authority they carry along with them.

We do not send you to Herodotus, and Pliny, or such-like Writers; who, though they were very good Authors, yet took a great deal of what they said, from uncertain Reports.

Much less do we send you to a Golden Legend, or the Lives of the Saints, as they have been written of later Days, by Men who took Advantage of the Ignorance and Credulity of the Age they liv'd in, to obtrude what they pleased upon the World.

But we send you to Authors who themselves knew, and were Witnesses of what they wrote.

Who gave all possible Proof of their Sincerity and Integrity, not only by publicly, in all Places, asserting the Truth of what they had Written, but some of them also Sealing it with their Blood.

Who were so assisted with the Divine Spirit, that they themselves wrought the same Miracles, for the Confirmation of Christ's Doctrine, that they had recorded him to have done.

And lastly, Who in all succeeding Ages were had in such Veneration among Christians, that their Writings were esteemed the Platform and Standard of true Faith: And upon which they set so high a Value, that they would keep them at the Peril of their Lives. And Instances we have of Multitudes, who rather chose Torments and Death, than they would deliver up their Bibles.

Taking

Taking now all this together, can any thing like it be said for the Truth or the Authority of any other Book in the World?

But this is not All. I desire in the Seventh and Last Place, it may be considered, That we do not send you to a bare Book for the Proof of the Christian Religion, how much soever that Book may have the Marks, not only of a True and Genuine, but also of a Divine History. But we insist upon a great many other Things for the Proof of the Matters contained in that Book, besides the Authority of the Book itself. VII.

If, indeed, nothing had followed upon Christ's publishing his Gospel, and we had never heard more of it, or him, save what we might happen to meet with in those Old Writings; I do not know how far their Evidence alone, now, at the Distance of near Seventeen hundred Years, would have prevailed with us to embrace his Religion: But now when we see and are convinced, that so many remarkable Effects ensued upon his Preaching in the World, and still continue visible at this Day; which yet cannot be ascribed to any other Cause, than to the particular Power and Providence of God, which was concerned to justify our Saviour, and his Pretensions to the World: This is certainly a new Evidence, and a standing one, both for that Book which mentions all these Things, and, especially, for that Cause it maintains.

The Case of the Christian Religion is plainly this: Jesus Christ, a mean Person as to his outward Circumstances, sets up for a Preacher of a new Religion. And this, not in the Times of Ignorance and Barbarism (when an Imposture might be supposed more easy to be carried on, and which Advantages Mahomet afterwards made use of) but in the Reign of Augustus Cæsar, when Learning, and Arts, and Sciences were in the most flourishing Condition, that ever they were known to be.

He chuses a Company of very ordinary Unlettered Men, but very Honest Men, to be the Witnesses of his Conversation and Doctrine: And these he designs for the Spreaders of his Religion throughout the World.

He neither makes use of Arts, nor Arms for the gaining Disciples to himself: Only declares plainly, that he is the Person, whom God had long before promised to send, and whom he did now send, to publish Eternal Salvation to all that should believe in him.

The Religion which he taught, and which all his Followers were to take upon them, was so far from gratifying Flesh and Blood, that it seemed much better better contrived, as the World then stood, for the frightening Men from it, than for the alluring Profelytes to it.

For there was nothing in it that ministred to any sensual or worldly Purposes; nothing that tended to make a Man either wise, or rich, or great, or happy, in the Sense of this World; but all the quite contrary. He that would be his Disciple, must quit all the popular Notions about Happiness. Instead of being thought wise, must submit to be counted a Fool for Christ's sake. Instead of getting Wealth, or Honour, or Preferment, must be prepared to part with all these Things, if he was already possessed of them; must deny himself, and all his Temporal Interests; nay, must forsake Father and Mother, and his own Life also, whenever he was called to it. The way to Heaven, as he taught it, was by Humility and Meekness, and Contempt of the World, and all the Glories of it; by patient suffering Afflictions and Injuries, and an absolute Resignation of ourselves to God, to do and suffer whatever was his Will. And he himself, as he lived thus, so did he thus go off the Stage; being, after Three Years preaching this Sort of Doctrine, hanged up on a Cross, as an Impostor, and that by the Vote of his own Country-men.

Where now was the Temptation to the Generality of Men, to own this Man as a Prophet sent from God to Mankind? Why, in truth, by what I have yet represented, there was very little: Nay, indeed, to any one that considers these Beginnings of the Gospel, it will be Matter of Astonishment that any more came of it, and that it did not presently die with the Author of it.

But here was the Thing. Our Lord, in how poor a Condition soever he lived, yet he spake as never Man spake. He so explained the Old Scriptures which foretold of him; He taught such important Truths concerning another Life, concerning the Nature and Providence of God, and his Mercy to lost Mankind, and the Way in which he would be served, and in what Sort of Things it was, that true Religion did consist, that he pierced the very Souls of those that heard him. There was so much Evidence in the Truths themselves that he delivered, that no honest vertuously-disposed Minds could stand out against them, but must be convinced, in their own Consciences, that this, of all that they had ever heard of, was a Religion worthiest to come from God, and most accommodated to the Spiritual Needs of Men; nay, and their Temporal ones too, supposing that all Men would embrace it.

And

And then the whole Tenor of his Life was fuitable hereunto: For he appeared in all his Actions and Converſation, to be a Man of ſo much Candor and Goodneſs, and Clearneſs of Spirit; ſo Humble, ſo Juſt, ſo Prudent, ſo Charitable, ſo Obliging to all Mankind; ſo full of Piety and Devotion, and Reſignation to God; and laſtly, ſo free from all Suſpicion that he carried on any ſelfiſh Deſigns, that all theſe Heavenly Doctrines came better out of his Mouth, than if any other had delivered them.

But that which crowned all was this; that throughout the whole Stage of his Life there was a viſible Evidence of a Divine Power and Preſence going along with him, which ſhewed itſelf in a thouſand Inſtances of the moſt glorious Miracles that ever were ſeen or heard of in the World, and that to the Amazement of the whole Country where he lived.

In this manner, I ſay, did our Saviour lay the Foundation for a Belief of his Doctrine, to all ſucceeding Generations; and a ſolid unſhaken Foundation it was.

But yet, for all that, if the Power of God had ſtopped here, I do not know what Superſtructure would ever have been made upon this Foundation.

For ſo it was, that thoſe very Men, thoſe honeſt plain-hearted Men that he had taken into his Family, to be Wit-neſſes

nesses of what he did and taught, with a design, as I told you, of sending them abroad to publish all those Things throughout the World; yet, when he came to die, such poor-spirited Creatures they proved, that every Man of them forsook him.

O sad Example of human Frailty and Inconstancy! Those Men that had the greatest Opportunities of knowing him and his Doctrine, and had professed the most firm Resolutions of adhering to him; yet all forsook him in the Hour of Danger, and shifted for themselves.

But God Almighty, tho' he suffered good Men to act as Men, did not therefore lay aside that great Design he had set on foot by our Lord Jesus; no, nor of accomplishing it by the Ministry of these very Men.

For he raised up his Son from the dead on the Third Day (as our Saviour had before told them he would); and this put new Life and Spirit into those Persons that had lately abandoned him.

But that was not all. Our Saviour calls them all together after he was thus risen from the dead. He acquaints them with the Work that he had committed to them. He assures them that he will be with them, and those that should succeed them in that Ministry for ever: Not in Person; for he was to continue in Heaven

Heaven to intercede for all Believers at the Right Hand of God; but by the Virtue and Presence of the Holy Spirit, who was to be his Deputy and Vicegerent upon Earth. This Holy Spirit he would in a few Days send down upon them, who should effectually furnish and endue them with all Powers, and Qualities, and Abilities, needful for the Discharge of so great a Work, as the Conversion of the World to his Religion, was. And after he had told them these things, he visibly, in their Presence, ascended up into Heaven.

Here now begins Christ's Kingdom. He had conquered Death before, and now he comes to conquer the Devil and the World. From henceforward you hear of no Fear, no Pusillanimity, no mean Behaviour in any of the Apostles. They then go and preach to all the World that Gospel which their Master ordered them. No Danger frights them: No human Learning or Philosophy is able to stand before them. The greatest Obstacles, the greatest Terrors that come in their way, are so far from making them quit the Work they had begun, that they rather prove Incentives to them to go on in it. They make it their Business to gain Souls in every Place to Jesus Christ: They run about the whole Roman Empire, and farther than ever that extended. They pretend pretend to no Eloquence, no polite Learning, no Arts of Insinuation: But they preach a plain, honest, pious Doctrine; but withal such a Doctrine, that as the Times then went, a Man must expect to bid an everlasting Adieu to all the Wealth, and Pleasures, and Honours of this World, if he once embraced it. They declare to all People the Authority they had for the Preaching this Doctrine. They vouch our Lord Jesus Christ as the Author of it, who died for the bearing Testimony to it, and rose again for its Confirmation, and is now King of Heaven and Earth. And they shewed, that they had an authentick Commission from Heaven for the doing all this; by speaking the Language of every Country where they came, without ever being taught it; by curing all diseased People that were brought to them; by dispossessing Devils; by giving Sight to the Blind, and making the Lame to walk, and restoring dead Bodies to life.

All these wonderful Things they did all the World over. And what the Effects hereof were, was manifest every where, and continues manifest to this Day.

The Gospel spread like Lightning in all Places; And wherever it came, Pagan Idolatry was confounded: Till at last the whole Roman Empire was converted to the Religion of Jesus Christ. Converted
it

it was by Men naked and unassisted; without the least Encouragement at the first from the Secular Powers, nay, in Contradiction to the severest Penalties that the Secular Powers could contrive or decree to hinder it.

We grant, indeed, that many Thousands of brave Men did lose their Lives in this Religious War between our Lord Jesus Christ and the Devil (who was then the Prince of this World) and did patiently submit to Death, that they might assert the Truth of our Saviour's Cause: But that was Christ's Way of vanquishing the Devil; he did thus break the Serpent's Head, while the Serpent bruised his Heel: And he did at last, by this Way, effectually break his Kingdom; as is visible and notorious even from that Time to this Day.

And now I Appeal to every one, whether this, which is Matter of Fact, and known to all Men that look into the Histories of Time; and of which we, at this Day, see and enjoy the happy Effects, in having the Christian Religion not only received among us, but made a Part of our National Constitution: I say, whether this be not a convincing Proof, both of the Truth of our Religion, and likewise of those Scriptures from whence we fetch it.

Had not the Christian Religion been true, How could these Things have ever come to pass? Seeing it is utterly unconceivable, that without a Divine Power, they could be effected: And sure none can suppose that God would exert his Power for the confirming of a Falshood.

And again: Had not our Scriptures been true likewise, or had they been the Fictions of any designing Men; How is it possible they should have given us an Account of these Things so long before they came to pass, and when there was so little Appearance of their ever coming to pass? And yet all that I have now mentioned is plainly there set down, as foretold by our Saviour, and his Apostles: And not only those Things, but a great many other remarkable Events are there also foretold, which have since been exactly made good.

I hope, by what hath been said, it doth appear that we, at this Day, have sufficient Arguments to oblige us to believe and adhere to the Religion of Jesus Christ, tho' we never saw the Original Proofs he gave of it; which was the Point I was to make good. For, I think, I have shewed, That if those Proofs were good and conclusive at the first, to them that saw them, and were Witnesses of them; they are so to us now, who receive them upon their Testimony. And as for the Difference that may be alledged in Point of Evidence, between a Man's seeing a Thing, and receiving it upon the Report of others; all that, I think, by the Account I have given, is in a great Measure out of Doors as to this Matter. For the Report upon which we receive the Gospel, being so authentick, so unexceptionable, and likewise so confirmed by Matters of Fact still visible to us, it amounts to as strong a Proof, as if we had Evidence of Sense. And I do in my Conscience believe, that there is not a Man in this Nation now stands out against the Religion of Jesus Christ, but who would have done so, if he had lived in the Time of our Saviour, and heard him preach the Gospel.

As for us who believe, let us persevere in our Faith without wavering. Our Faith is never the worse for not seeing. Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. And as for those that do not believe, their not seeing will be no Excuse for them, if our Saviour may be credited: For it was as well with respect to them that did not see, as to them that did, that he pronounced his Definitive Sentence, when he sent out his Apostles to Preach his Religion: Go (saith he) and preach the Gospel to every Creature: He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.

God

God give us all Grace to consider the Things that belong to our Everlasting Peace. That both all those who now oppose the Truth as it is in Christ Jesus, may be converted from the Error of their Ways; and that all those who do own and profess it, may adorn the Doctrine of God which he hath called them to, by a pure, holy, and unblameable Life; To the Glory of God, and the Eternal Salvation of their Souls, in the Day of our Lord Jesus. To whom, &c.

S E R-

SERMON IV.

Preached at the Coronation of Queen ANNE;

I N T H E

Abbey-Church at Westminster,

On the 23d of April, 1702.

I S A I A H xlix. 23.

Kings shall be thy Nursing-Fathers, and their Queens thy Nursing-Mothers.

I Am aware how much Time the following Solemnity will take up, and therefore I mean to give as little Interruption to it as possible; being very sensible, that the Shortness of my Sermon will be the best Recommendation of it. Three Things I beg Leave to do upon this Occasion.

First

First, To give some Account of the Promise here made in my Text; and what Obligation it lays upon Princes, with Relation to their Subjects.

Secondly, To Congratulate with You, and the whole Kingdom, the happy Prospect we have of God's making good this Promise to us at this Day, in setting Her Present Majesty upon the Throne of Her Ancestors.

Thirdly, To shew what Returns of Duty and Gratitude, and Filial Obedience, this Consideration of the Queen's being a Nursing-Mother to Her People, doth call for from us, and all other Her Subjects.

I begin with the First.

This Chapter, out of which I have taken my Text, hath always been understood to be, and it certainly is, a Prophecy of our Lord Jesus Christ, and of the Propagation of his Religion, and the spreading of his Church throughout the World. And it teacheth us, That though the Beginnings of this Religion, this Church of Christ, were very small and inconsiderable; yet in due Time, a vast Number of Nations and Peoples should be brought in to it: So that Kings and Queens should submit their Scepters to that of Jesus Christ, and become Nursing-Fathers and Nursing-Mothers to his Church and People.

As for the fulfilling of this Promise, especially among us of this Nation, I shall say something by and by. That which I now desire to take Notice of, is the Terms by which the Relation between Christian Princes and their People, is here expressed; Nursing-Fathers and Nursing-Mothers.

Let us take these Terms in what Sense we will; whether for Natural Parents, or for those that supply the Place of Parents in the taking Care of Children, that is to say, Guardians or Nurses; yet the Relation in both these Notions, doth imply a wonderful Trust reposed in Princes; and a wonderful Care, and Solitude, and Tenderness, required of them, on the Behalf of their Subjects.

Kings shall be thy Nursing-Fathers, and Queens thy Nursing-Mothers? O! if all Christian Princes considered this, and looked upon themselves as placed by God on their Thrones, for the making good this Office and Character; with what a Zeal would it inspire them for their Peoples Good?

They would then look upon the whole Kingdom as their own Family, and concern themselves as much for the Welfare of their Subjects, as Parents do for their Children, or Guardians for their Pupils.

It would be impossible, upon this Supposition, that ever they should make their own Interests distinct or separate from those of their People. How great soever their Powers or Prerogatives were, yet they would never think them well employed, but when the Publick Good was promoted by them. Nor could they propose any other End to themselves in their Government, but to defend those under their Charge, from all Insults from Abroad; and to maintain them in Peace at Home, and to make every Soul of them as happy as their Condition will bear.

And for the doing of this, they would think themselves obliged, above all Things, to take Care of the Church of God; remembering that it is chiefly with Respect to That, that they have the Charge of being Nursing-Fathers and Nursing-Mothers. As such therefore, they would make it their Business to maintain and defend the true Religion; to encourage Piety and Vertue; to oppose and discountenance all Atheism and Infidelity, all Heresies and Schisms, and all Vice and Wickedness, and Impiety, of what Nature soever. They would use their utmost Endeavour to make all their Subjects good Men, and good Christians, as knowing that it is impossible for them to be happy, even in this World, without being so.

And in order to this, they would be sure, in their own Persons, to set good Examples to their Subjects, of Piety and Devotion, of Temperance and Moderation, and all other Vertues. And they would likewise take Care, as much as in them lay, lay, that all that are about them did the like.

They would be continually thinking of that Psalm of David, which he composed upon his being advanced to the Kingdom of Israel, and wherein he declares the Rules he resolved to observe in his Government. It is the Hundred and First Psalm, I will Sing (saith he) of Mercy and Judgment; unto thee, O Lord, will I Sing. O let me have Understanding in the Way of Godliness. When wilt thou come unto me? I will walk in my House with a perfect Heart. I will take no wicked Thing in Hand; I hate the Works of the Unfaithful, no such shall cleave unto me. A froward Heart shall depart from me; I will not know a wicked Person.——My Eyes look upon such as are faithful in the Land, that they may dwell with me. Whoso leadeth a Godly Life, he shall be my Servant.——I shall soon destroy all the Ungodly that are in the Land, that I may root out all wicked Doers from the City of the Lord.

And as such Nursing-Fathers and Nursing-Mothers as we are speaking of, would thus concern themselves for God and his Religion, and the Spiritual Interests of their People; so no less solicitous would they be to secure and promote their Temporal Peace and Happiness. And accordingly they would think themselves obliged, as much as they could, to look into the Affairs of the Kingdom with their own Eyes; and to see that all the Magistrates under them did their Duty in their respective Stations and Offices. They would take Care not to suffer their Favourites to encroach upon them, nor ever to make Use of their Credit with the Prince for the oppressing the meanest of the People. But they would provide that Impartial Justice should be Administred to all their Subjects; but yet such Justice as is tempered with Mercy. Remembring what God hath told them in the Scriptures, that their Thrones shall be upholden by Mercy.

In a Word, As the Ends they proposed to themselves in their Government, would be the Good of their People; so the Measures they pitched upon for the Administration of it would be accordingly. That is to say, in such a Constitution as ours, where the People have their fixed Rights and Liberties and Properties, the standing Laws of the Kingdom would always be the Rule of their Actions. Nor would they either violate those Laws themselves, nor give any Dispensation, or even Encouragement to others to do it.

O how happy is that People that have such Princes to Reign over them! They are out of all Fears of Despotick or Arbitrary Proceedings. Indeed, Arbitrariness is a Word fit for none but God; for all his

Crea-

Creatures are under Laws, by which they must be Governed. And yet I think it is an Affront to God to say, that even he himself ever acts arbitrarily, in the Sense we commonly use that Word.

God doth, indeed, whatsoever pleaseth him, PS CXXXV.
both in Heaven and in Earth. But then ^{6.} that Pleasure of his, is always Governed by the eternal Laws of Wisdom, and Righteousness, and Goodness, which are essential to his own Mind.

We may likewise truly say, that God doth all Things, both in Heaven and in Earth, for his own Glory; but then that Glory doth only consist in the Manifestation of his Excellencies and Perfections to his Creatures, and doing them the greatest Good they are capable of.

Now such a Glory as this, it is allowable to every Man in his Sphere, to be ambitious of, but Princes ought to be so above all others: For by this, they truly imitate God, and make good their Character of being his Representatives upon Earth; a sort of Gods among Men, as the Scripture often calls them. And by Governing after this Way, they render themselves truly Glorious, in being Esteemed, and Loved, and Honoured while they live, and transmitting their Memories, with a grateful Odour, to all succeeding Generations.

The Fourth Sermon.

But for the most absolute Princes upon Earth, to use their Power for the oppressing, or doing Hurt to the meanest of Mankind; or to think of advancing their Glory by any other Methods, than by doing all the Good they can to all the World, and especially to their own Subjects; this is being Arbitrary in a wicked Sense, and gives such a Notion of Glory, as was not known among the Creatures of GOD, till the Revolt of the fallen Angels, from whom some of the corrupted Masses of Mankind, by their Instigation, have since taken it.

But I proceed to my Second Point; to speak something of the fulfilling of this Prophecy in my Text, of GOD's raising up Kings and Queens to be our Nursing-Fathers and Nursing-Mothers.

And blessed be GOD this Promise hath, for many Ages, from Time to Time, been made good to Abundance of Nations and Peoples: But to none more amply, more signally, than to us of this Kingdom.

As the Christian Faith was Planted here as early, almost, as in any Nation, (for it was Planted here in the Time of the Apostles, and probably by one of them) so if we may believe our Histories, it was this Country of ours, to which GOD vouchsafed the Honour of St. Lucius having the First Christian King in Europe; and and consequently the first Nursing-Father. And likewise the Honour of giving Birth to that Emperor, who was the first Nursing-Father to all Christendom; so early was this Promise of GOD to his Church, fulfilled among us. Constantine.

It is not likewise a little to the Honour of our Nation, nor a little Argument of GOD's Care over us, that when the Liberties of all Christian Kings and People were invaded and oppressed by the Papal Usurpations; and Christianity it self was corrupted by Superstition and Idolatry: It was an English King that first threw off the Foreign Yoke; and it was an English King also, that first begun the Reformation of Religion.

But the Honour of perfecting that great Work, was reserved for a Queen. You all know whom I mean, the Immortal Elizabeth, whose Name will be precious, not only in this Nation, but in all the Reformed Countries of Europe, as long as Time shall last.

Her Reign alone will let us see, that it was not without great Reason, that in my Text, Queens are joyn'd as equal Sharers with Kings, in making up the Blessing which is here promis'd to GOD's People.

And such another QUEEN we trust GOD has now given us.

The Fourth Sermon.

We ought, indeed, to admire G O D's Goodness to us: Often have we provoked him by our manifold Sins and Impieties. And often hath he punished us for them. But yet in his Judgments he hath always remembred Mercy. When we have been in our greatest Distresses, he hath always raised up Deliverers to us.

Even then, when our Constitution was not long since (not so long since, but that many here present may remember it) quite subverted by Factions at Home; yet in a little Time did he Restore our Lawful King, and with him our Church, and Laws, and Liberties.

And when upon his Death, all of them were again in Danger by a Faction from another Quarter; and we had no Prospect but of sinking under the Calamity; yet then he raised up our late King and Queen, of Glorious Memory, to rescue us from our Dangers, and to secure us in the Possession of all that was dear and valuable to us.

So that, blessed be G O D, we still continue upon the same Bottom we were: We have still the same Religion, the same Church, the same Government: We still enjoy the same Rights and Liberties, and Properties, that ever we did. O may they for ever be continued to us and our Posterity. And we hope in G O D's Mercy that they will.

For

For tho' it hath pleas'd him to deprive us of these Two great Blessings, by taking to himself, first our incomparable QUEEN, and now lately our KING, who was the great Support, not only of these Kingdoms, but of all Europe: Yet such is his Goodness, that he hath preserv'd to us another Branch of the same Royal Stock, to repair our Losses. Ramo uno avulso non deficit alter Aureus.

A Sister of our never-to-be-forgotten QUEEN, is yet left us. Of whom, if we may make Presages, either from the long Experience we have had of her many Personal Vertues, express'd in a more private Condition, and particularly her Firmness to the English Church, and English Interest, in the most difficult Times:

Or from the Instances she has already given, since her Accession to the Throne;

Of Her Zeal for the supporting of the common Cause of Europe, against the exorbitant Power of France;

Of Her tender Love to Her People, express'd in such a Donative, as is hardly to be parallel'd by any Thing heretofore seen in this Kingdom;

Of Her Concern for our Religion, our Laws, our Liberties; for the Continuance of the Crown in the Protestant Line; for the Government in Church and State, as by Law Establish'd: All which She has assur'd us in her Gracious Declaration, and from the Throne, are as dear to her, as to any Person whatsoever; and that no Pains nor Diligence shall ever be wanting on her Part, to preserve and maintain them.
the

Lastly, Of Her Solemn Resolution, (declar'd in her Proclamation) to Discountenance and Punish all manner of Vice and Profaneness, and Immorality, in all Persons, of whatsoever Degree or Quality; and particularly, in such as are employ'd near Her Royal Person. And that, for the greater Encouragement of Religion and Morality, She will, upon all Occasions, distinguish Persons of Piety and Vertue, by Marks of Her Royal Favour.

I say, if we may draw good Omens from those former Experiences of her Majesty's Life, and from these Auspicious Beginnings of her Reign; There is just Reason for us all to Congratulate with the whole Kingdom, the happy Prospect we have, that God, in setting Her upon the Throne, hath again fulfilled his Promise in my Text; hath given us in Her, another Nursing-Mother to his Church and People; and one who will make good that Character, in all the Instances I have before mentioned.

What have we now to do, but to thank God heartily for all the repeated Instances of his Favour to us, and particularly this last one. And to pray earnestly for Her Majesty, that her following Reign may may be suitable to these happy Beginnings.

But in Order to these Prayers being effectual, there is something required of us, which is fit here to be mentioned, as being a Natural Application of what I have already said.

And that is, That we take Care not to hinder or obstruct the happy Effects of Her Majesty's Gracious Intentions to her People, by any unbecoming Carriage of ours: But always bear in Mind what Returns of Duty, and Gratitude, and Filial Obedience, this Consideration of the Queen's being a Nursing-Mother to her People, doth call for from us, and all other her Subjects.

This is the Third, and last Thing, I proposed to speak to, but for fear of being too long, I shall but just touch upon it.

If all Subjects did seriously consider this Relation between their Princes and them, they would think themselves obliged to bear the same Love and Affection, to pay the same Honour and Reverence, and Obedience to their Nursing-Fathers and Nursing-Mothers, as they do to their Natural Parents.

They would endeavour to make their Reigns as easy as was possible, by contributing, every Man in his Sphere, what Assistance they could to their Prince, for the promoting the common Good.

They

They would make it their Study to live in as much Peace and Unity with their Fellow-Subjects, as if they dwelt together in one Family.

They would have no Interests separate from the Common-wealth; nor would they, for the advancing themselves, ever seek the Ruin of others.

They would not, for Difference in Opinion, about the Methods of the Publick Conduct, break out into Parties and Factions: Much less, in Case of such Divisions, would they Sacrifice the Peace of the Kingdom, to their own private Resentments, and mingle Heaven and Earth for the supporting of a Side.

They would seriously remember the Caution which St. Paul hath given us, and which indeed concerns every one of this Nation, but especially those that are concerned in the Publick Management, often to think of. If (saith he) ye bite and devour one another, have a Care that ye be not consumed one of another. Nothing can ever so much endanger this Kingdom as our own Divisions. And if ever we be ruin'd, in all Probability, it is these will be the Cause of it.

It is one very good Omen (among the rest that I have mentioned) of her Majesty's Happy Reign, that no Prince ever came to the Throne with a more general Satisfaction, and with more good Wishes of the People.

And

And it must be said, to the Honour of this Parliament, that never any Parliament gave more extraordinary Testimonies of their sincere Affection and Duty, and Kindness to their Prince, than this Parliament hath given to the Queen.

O may this good Understanding, these mutual Endearments between the Queen and Her People, for ever continue. And abhorred be the Memory of that Man, that makes the first Step towards the breaking of them.

Then shall we be Happy: As Happy as the Vicissitudes of this World will allow us to be. And as the Queen will rejoice in her People; so it will be Her Peoples daily Prayer, that God would long, long preserve Queen ANNE.

H E B. ii. 3.

How shall we escape, if we neglect so great Salvation?

TO shew the Meaning of this Text, and the Use we are to put it to, there needs no more to be done, than to enquire what is here meant by Salvation: And then Secondly, Upon what Occasion these Words come in, and what was the Apostle's Design in them.

As

As to the First; Salvation, in its general Sense, imports any great Deliverance from Evil or Danger. Thus God's conducting the Israelites through the Red-Sea, and drowning the Egyptians, is called God's Salvation, Exod. xiv. 13. Thus the Deliverance of the Israelites out of the Hands of the Philistines, is called a great Salvation, 1 Sam. xiv. 45. And indeed this is the usual Sense of the Word throughout the Old Testament. But now, because the greatest of all Evils and Dangers which Mankind are obnoxious to, are those that are occasioned by their Sins; therefore is the Word Salvation, by way of Eminence appropriated to that Deliverance, which our Lord Jesus Christ wrought for Mankind, from their Sins, and the Punishment of them. So that our Salvation, in the New Testament Sense, is the same Thing with our Redemption by Christ Jesus. Christ came to be our Saviour, and that Redemption he wrought for us, is our Salvation. And as many Parts or Branches as there go to the making up that Redemption; so many Parts and Branches there go to the making up our Salvation.

This now, is that Salvation my Text speaks of; only with this Difference; That by an usual Figure, the Apostle here puts Salvation for the Doctrine of Salvation, or that Gospel of Christ which tenders this Salvation to Mankind; as appears by what follows follows in the Verse; How shall we escape, if we neglect so great Salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him? Now what Salvation could that be, which was first spoken by our Lord, and confirmed by the Apostles that heard him, but the Doctrine, or the Gospel of this Salvation which they Preached?

As for the other Thing; The Connection of this Text with what goes before, and the Design that is here pursued, it lies thus; The Apostle begins this Chapter with an Exhortation, by way of Inference from his former Discourse. We ought therefore (saith he) to give the more earnest Heed to the Things we have heard, (that is, the Doctrine of the Gospel he had been recommending to them) lest at any Time we let them slip. In the next Verse, he gives a Reason why they ought to be so regardful of these Things: Because (says he) if the Word spoken by Angels was stedfast, and every Transgression and Disobedience, received a just Recompence of Reward; How shall we escape, if we neglect so great Salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, &c? That is to say; If the Old Law, the Law of Moses, which was delivered only by Angels, was of so great Authority, that God would not permit any wilful Transgression of it to go without a severe Punishment: How shall we escape, if we neglect glect or despise the New Law of the Gospel; the Doctrine of so great a Salvation, as is delivered to us by no less a Person than the Son of God, and confirmed to us by his Apostles, who were Witnesses of what he did and taught?

The Text then, you see, is brought in as a Motive or Argument to enforce the Apostle's Exhortation in the beginning of the Chapter. And I do not know how I can better serve the Ends of this Day's Meeting, than by making Use of it to the same Purpose.

My Business, at this Time, is to call upon all that hear me, to employ this present Season that we are now entering upon, in the Examining the State of their Souls, and Repenting of their Sins past; and turning to God with all their Hearts, by seriously applying themselves to the Work of Religion, if they have hitherto neglected it: And all this in order to the attaining those Benefits, that Salvation which is made over to all true Penitents, by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Now what better Method can I use, to prevail upon any of you to put this in Practice, than by endeavouring to convince you of your utter Inexcusableness, and the Impossibility of your escaping, if you do not? And further, what better Argument can I pitch upon; for the convincing you of this Inexcusableness, this Impossibility of your Escaping; than that which here the Apostle lays so much Weight upon: Namely, The Greatness of that Salvation which you despise, so long as you continue in a State of Impenitence? How shall we escape, (saith he) if we neglect so great Salvation? This single Point, when put into a true Light, carries in it so many Obligations and Engagements to make us all forsake our Sinful Courses, and to lead Holy and Religious Lives, that where it is duly considered, it can hardly fail of producing that Effect. This Point, therefore, I beg Leave at this Time to insist upon, and to apply it, with all the Plainness and Earnestness I can, to the aforesaid Purposes.

Now the Greatness of this Salvation which the Gospel tenders to us, I shall here consider, in these Two Particulars. First, The Greatness of the Blessings contained in it. Secondly, The Greatness of the Encouragements we have to set about it. Upon both which Accounts it will appear, that we are infinitely inexcusable, so long as we continue to neglect it.

I begin with the First Head; The Greatness of the Salvation itself, which our Lord Jesus hath made over to us; or the Great Blessings it containeth in it. In which Respect we have just Reason to cry out, How shall we escape, if we neglect so great Salvation?

The Salvation of Christ is not like that of Moses, or Joshua, or Gideon; a Temporary, Secular one; a delivering of us out of the Slavery of Egypt; or a putting us into a peaceable Possession of a Land flowing with Milk and Honey; or a saving us from the Invasions and Oppressions of our Enemies: Tho' these are great Salvations, and are celebrated as such in the Old Testament: And it is a Salvation of this Nature; that the Jews do yet expect from their Messiah: But it is a Thing infinitely greater and more desirable.

The Salvation which Christ purchased, and the Gospel tenders to every Creature, is a Comprehension of the richest Blessings that God can bestow, and a Deliverance from the greatest Evils that Mankind can suffer. It contains in it all that can make the Nature of Man perfect, or the State of his Life happy; and frees him from all that either doth or can render his Condition miserable. Indeed, the Blessings of it are great beyond all Imagination. Eye hath not seen, nor Ear 1 Cor. ii. 9. heard, neither did enter into the Heart of Man, the Things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

For in the First Place; To be saved as Christ came to save the World, is to have all our Sins forgiven; all our numberless Iniquities and Transgressions blotted out; all those heavy Loads of Guilt

which oppressed our Souls, and might even justly sink them into Desperation, quite removed from our Minds.

It is to be reconciled to God, and restored to his Favour and Friendship; so that he shall be no longer a consuming Fire, no longer an angry, terrible, revenging God, but a most kind, compassionate, and tender-hearted Father to us.

It is to be at Peace with Him, and at Peace with our own Consciences; and to have a Title to his peculiar Love, and Care, and Protection all the Days of our Lives.

Again, Secondly, To be saved as Christ came to save the World, is to be rescued from the cruellest Bondage of our cruellest Enemies; from the Dominion of Sin, and the Tyranny of the Devil.

It is to be translated out of the Power of Darknes into the Kingdom of our dear Lord; so that Sin shall reign no longer in our mortal Bodies, but we shall serve God in the Newness of the Spirit.

It is to be asserted into a State of true Freedom and Liberty: So that we shall be no longer under the controul of blind Passions; or be hurried on by our impetuous Lusts to do those Things which our own Reason doth condemn; but are in such a Condition, that we can dispose of ourselves according to our own Desires, and our Desires shall be always such as are fit and becoming a reasonable Nature.

It is to have a new Principle of Life infused into us; by the Means of which, we shall not only live up to the Perfection of the Human Nature, but be made Partakers of the Divine.

It is to become the Temples of the Holy Spirit, to have him as a perpetual Guest and Lodger in our Hearts; whose Holy Fire will consume all our Dross and Impurity; whose comfortable Influences will always cheer and refresh us, and whose wise Counsels will always advise, direct, and govern us.

In a Word, It is to live like God, to be transformed into his Image, and to be made like unto him in Wisdom, and Righteousness, and Purity, and all other Perfections which the Nature of Man is capable of.

Furthermore, in the Third Place; To be saved as Christ came to save us, is to be delivered from the Wrath to come; from that dreadful Vengeance which shall one Day overtake all the World.

When the Heavens shall pass away with a crackling Noise of Fire; and the Elements shall melt with fervent Heat; the Earth also and all the Works that are therein shall be burnt up. 2 Pet. iii. 10.

When the Lord shall descend from Heaven with a mighty Shout, with Ten thousands of 1 Thes. iv. 16.

2 Thef. i. 8.
Jude 15. his Angels, to take Vengeance in flaming Fire, upon all ungodly Men, for all the ungodly Deeds which they have unrighteously committed.

When all Men, both small and great, dead and living, shall be summoned to appear before a dreadful and impartial Tribunal, and give an Account of all their Actions.

When the Greatest and the most Profperous Sinners that the Sun ever shone upon, shall tremble, and sneak, and be confounded; and should think themselves happy, if they could hide themselves in the Dens of the Mountains: When they shall say to the Rocks fall on us, and cover us from the Face of him that sitteth upon the Throne, and from the Wrath of the Lamb, whose Salvation we have despised.

I say, from this dreadful Day of Wrath, and all those amazing Terrors that do attend it; and which are but the due Portion of them that do Evil, doth Christ's Salvation, and His only, set us free.

But neither is this the greatest Blessing that is contained in this Salvation. For, in the Last Place; To be saved as Christ came to save the World, is after a Holy, and a Heavenly, and in some measure a Happy Life in this World, to be translated into a State of Endless Happiness in another World.

Never to die any more ; never to suffer the Uneasinesses and Infirmities of an Earthly Body any more ; never to know Pain or Sickness, Grief and Sorrow, Labour and Weariness, Disquiet or Vexation any more. But to live in perfect Ease and Peace ; in perfect Freedom and Liberty ; in a perfect Enjoyment of our Selves, and the greatest Good we can be Partakers of, and that in the most perfect Way for ever and ever.

It is to have our Bodies that slept in the Dust, raised again, and reunited to our Souls : But no longer Gross, Earthly, Corruptible Bodies ; but Spiritual, Heavenly, Immortal ones ; fashioned like unto Christ's Glorious Body, in the which he now Sits at the Right Hand of God.

It is to live in the City of the Great King ; the Heavenly Jerusalem ; a Country of perpetual Light and Bliss ; where the Glory of the Lord doth fill the Place ; and, where every Object that presents itself, adds a new Beauty, and contributes to the Increase of the Delight.

It is to spend an Eternity in the most Noble and Agreeable Employments : In viewing and contemplating the wonderful Works of God ; in admiring the Wise Contrivances of his Providence in all Ages ; in adoring his Infinite Love to the Sons of Men ; in reflecting upon our own inexpressible Happiness, that ariseth from his Communications to us; and in singing Everlasting Hymns of Praise, and Joy, and Triumph to God, and our Lord Jesus, upon Account of all these Things.

It is to dwell for ever in a Place where there are no Objects of Pity or Compassion; of Anger or Envy; of Hatred or Distrust. Every Person there being as happy as he desires; and all increasing the Happiness of one another, by their mutual Kindnesses and Endearments.

It is to converse with the most delightful Company in the World; to be restored to the Society of all our dear Friends and Relations, that died in the Faith of Christ; and to have an Acquaintance with all the Great Souls whose Illustrious Vertues and Atchievements made them famous in their Generations.

Lastly, It is to be with Jesus Christ, and to behold his Glory; and to live for ever in seeing and enjoying the Great God, in whose Presence is the Fulness of Joy, and at whose Right Hand there are Pleasures for evermore.

This is the Salvation which Christ hath purchased for us. This is the Salvation which is offered to all Mankind in the Gospel. And now have we not great Reason to cry out with the Apostle, How shall we escape, if we neglect so great Salvation?

Can any thing be said in Excuse for such a Wretch, as being convicted of grievous Crimes, and thereupon justly sentenced to suffer Death for them; yet through the powerful Intercession of the Prince with his Father, hath not only a Pardon offered him, but Preferment and Honour, and the Favour of his Sovereign; doth yet, nevertheless, stand out against these Overtures, and despiseth these undeserved Bounties, and chuseth rather to die miserably, than to live happily? I say, What can be said in Excuse for such an unaccountable Madness as this? Who can pity such a stupid Fool, that will thus against all Sense and Reason undo himself?

Why, Brethren, this is just our Case. In as bad a Condition are all of us, by reason of our Offences against Heaven, as this condemned Malefactor; or rather in a much worse. For the worst of his Punishment is but Temporal Death; but Spiritual Death, and all the horrid Consequences thereof, are the deserved Wages, the just Recompence of our Transgressions.

But so infinitely kind is our God to us, that through the Mediation of his Son Jesus, he is willing not to take these Advantages against us; nay, he offers a Pardon of all our Sins; nay, not only so, but he offers his Love, his Friendship,

his Favour, which is better than Life itself. He offers to advance us into the nearest Relation with himself; to be the Children of the most High; to be the Brethren of our Lord Jesus; to be Kings and Priests with his own Son; and Heirs, together with him, of an Eternal Inheritance in the Heavens, of a Crown of Glory that fadeth not away.

Is it not now the extremest Stupidity in the World, not to close with these gracious Tenders? To be so in Love with Sin and Misery, to be so fond of Chains and Darkness, as to despise these unspeakable Blessings which Heaven holds forth to us?

O Blessed God! That Thou shouldst be so rich in Mercy, so abundant in Kindness and Love, as to propose the most inestimable Treasures of thy Grace and Favour to the Acceptance of every Human Creature; and that yet most of us should be so foolish, or so wretched, as to take little Notice of them!

But we, shallow Things as we are, are bewitched with this present World. A few painted Bubbles do so hold our Eyes, that we cannot look up to those glorious, unvaluable Gems, that are so fairly presented before us.

O the base degenerate Spirits of Man-kind! That they should be contented to lead the Life of Brutes, (and it would be well

well if they could die like them too,) when it is in their Power to live like Angels, and God himself!

That they should with Patience endure the Vassalage of the Devil, and a Thousand Lusts as Impure and Tyrannical as He; when they may enjoy the most glorious Liberty of the Sons of God!

That they should chuse to spend their Days in Vanity and Emptiness, in Folly and Misery, in *fanciful Satisfaction*s, but in real Care and Sorrow; and after all this, reap nothing but Anguish, and Woe, and Confusion for ever: When they may both live happily here, (God, even in this World, requiting them for all the Pains and Trouble they undergo for his sake;) and, in the World to come, be the Noblest, the most Glorious Beings that Words can express, or the Mind of Man conceive of.

O if we would sit down, and give ourselves leave calmly to ponder these Things; How would it be possible for us to lead such Lives as many of us do? How would it be possible for us to live loosely and carelessly, without God, without any Sense of Religion, wholly minding the Gratification of our Brutish, or our Worldly Inclinations? These Arguments are of such Force, that it is hard for Human Nature to stand out against them, if they be vigorously applied to the Mind.

If

If we did heartily believe, and seriously consider what the present Life is, and what will come after: If we did sedately weigh the infinite Disproportion between a Moment and Eternity; and what a very Trifle even the greatest Businesses, the greatest Enjoyments, and the greatest Sufferings in this World, must needs be thought in Comparison with that Eternal Weight of Glory, or that Everlasting Shame and Confusion of Face that will be hereafter:

I say, If we did in good Earnest attend to these Things, we could scarce avoid the finding a strange and a speedy Alteration in our selves. We should perceive new Thoughts, new Desires, new Designs and Resolutions to arise in our Minds.

We should, with the greatest Passion, cry out, Let us be happy in the next World, and then let what will become of us in this. Deal with us here, O Lord, as Thou pleasest, scourge us, afflict us, punish us, dispose us into what Circumstances Thou wilt; let us but Reign with Christ hereafter, and we have enough.

Were our Minds once seriously affected with these Things, all the Great, and the Rich, and the Gay Things of this World, which usually carry such Magick in them, would look so contemptibly, as that we should be amazed at our selves, ever to have had so little Judgment, as once to have put the Question, Whether for their

sakes we should lose our Innocence, and the Peace of our Mind, and forfeit our Title to the Favour of God.

O with what noble Thoughts and Resolutions would the Hopes of living for ever with our Lord Jesus in his Glory, inspire us! How regular would it make us in all our Conversation? How diligent in the Mortification of our Lusts and evil Habits? How strict and solemn in the Exercise of Devotion? How serious and constant in the Profession of Christ's Religion? And how solicitous above all Things to keep a good Conscience, and to do nothing inconsistent with our Duty, for the serving any Ends whatsoever.

But I have dwelt too long upon this Head. I pass on to the other General Point which I mentioned, touching the Greatness of this Salvation; and which will still farther extremely aggravate our Neglect of it: And that is, The Greatness of the Encouragement we have given us to set about it. In this respect also we have reason to cry out, How shall we escape, if we neglect so great Salvation?

Now under this Head, of the Encouragements that God hath given every Christian, to apply himself to the obtaining this Salvation, I shall insist on these Three Particulars.

First, The Easiness of the Terms upon which he offers it.

Secondly,

Secondly, His Readiness to accept even the greatest Sinners that will set themselves about it.

Thirdly, The great Assistances he doth afford for the obtaining of it. Of each of these very briefly.

And First of all, Let us put the Text thus. How shall we escape, if we neglect so great Salvation; which may be had upon such easy Terms?

It is true, God, when he proposes Salvation to us in the Gospel, dealeth with us as a Master doth with his Servants; we must do some Work before we have our Wages: If, indeed, Salvation can in any Sense be called Wages, and not rather the gratuitous Bounty of God; since there is no Proportion at all between the Work we do, and the Reward we receive for that Work. But some Work we must do, and therefore we are bid to work out our Salvation. Some Services are to be performed on our Parts, otherwise we are not to expect to enter into our Master's Joy.

But then, so infinitely kind a Master we have, and so Noble, so Rational, so Ingenuous a Service he hath put upon us; that the very Easiness of his Terms will be one of the blackest Aggravations of our Baseness and inexcusable Guilt, in refusing his Salvation.

If the Conditions that God requireth of us had been such as are represented in the Fifth of Micah, where the Prophet brings in a Man speaking after this manner; Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow my self before the Most High God? Will the Lord be pleased with Thousands of Rams, or Ten thousand Rivers of Oyl? Or shall I give my First-born for my Transgression, the Fruit of my Body for the Sin of my Soul? I say, if the Terms of Recomending our selves to God had been such as these, we had had some Reason to complain of the Severity of them; and consequently some Excuse for our not being so forward to set upon that Salvation which was promised upon them: They being neither good in themselves, nor practicable to the most. For at this rate, none but very Rich or very Cruel Hard-hearted Men could be supposed to go to Heaven.

But when, as the Prophet goes on, God hath commanded us only those Things that are Good. And what doth the Lord require of us, but to do justly, to love Mercy, and to walk humbly with our God? I say, since this is our Case, what Excuse can be made for that Man, that will not purchase Everlasting Salvation at so easy a Price as this?

Certain it is, that the Terms of our future Happiness, as they are proposed by our Saviour, are made up of Duties, which are in themselves so agreeable to the Make and Frame of our Nature; do so highly tend to the Improvement and Perfection of our Faculties; nay, and are so needful to our Happiness and Well-being in this World: That we must of Necessity, if we would not be miserable, have imposed them as a Law upon our selves, though God had not oblig'd us to them. And can it be accounted hard Usage in God, to promise Eternal Rewards to the doing of those Things, which we should have thought reasonable to be done, though no such Rewards had been promised?

Are we not very hardly dealt with, think, you to have all the Glories of Heaven offered to us upon such Conditions as these? That we will live up to the Dignity of our Natures; that we will lead the Life of Men, and not of Brute Creatures; and that we will endeavour in this World, to make our Being as happy as we can, by the Practice of Vertue and Righteousness. And yet these are the Terms upon which God hath offered Salvation to Mankind in the Gospel. O wonderful Severity! O heavy Burthens, not to be endured upon our Shoulders!

What shall we say to the Perverseness of Sensual Men? The greatest Pleasures that are to be had on Earth, are so Terrible to them, that for their Sakes they dare not cast a Look towards the Happiness of Heaven. Such Self-denying Creatures they are, that rather than be as Happy as is possible in this World, they will venture Eternal Misery in the World to come.

How is it possible to lay a surer Foundation for Ease and Peace, and the Enjoyment of our Selves in all States and Conditions of Life, than to have a hearty Sense of God's Presence and Goodness? To love him who is the most lovely Object in the World; to believe his Revelations who is Truth itself, to depend upon him in all our Necessities, and to rejoice continually in the Expressions of his Kindness and Bounty to us. To procure to our selves as many Friends, and as few Enemies as is possible, by being True, and Faithful, and Just in our Dealings, and exercising Meekness, and Charity, and Kindness, and Forgiveness to all Men. To live in a Sober and Moderate Use of all the good Things of this Life. To keep our Passions and Appetites within such Bounds, as shall neither disturb our Health, nor our Understandings, nor the Ease and Quiet of our Minds. In a Word, to govern our selves, and all our Actions, by the Laws of the best and most perfect Reason.

What, I say, can be more natural or more delightful, or what can more contribute to a comfortable and happy Life in this World, than the Practice of these Things? And yet these are the dreadful Burthens that Christ has laid upon us. These are the terrible Bugbears that fright us from endeavouring after that Everlasting Salvation which he offers to us in the Gospel.

I know it will be said, That Repentance and Mortification, and disengaging our selves from Vicious Habits, which is necessary to be done, in order to Salvation, are not such delightful Things; but are very uneasy and troublesome. I answer, So is Physick very troublesome and uneasy to a Sick Man; but when it has performed its Effects, then Health and Joy succeeds in the Place of it.

But besides, As the Hardship of these Duties lasts but a very little while; so even during the Time it doth last, a Man's Life is much more easy and comfortable, than while he liv'd a Slave to his Lusts, and was perpetually haunted with an Evil Conscience. And this every Man in the World that ever tried, must needs acknowledge: Religion, even when its Severities are the greatest, (which is at the Entrance of it,) yet yields more Peace and Happiness, and Satisfaction, than a Life that is led without it.

So that upon the Consideration of the whole Matter; The Terms upon which Christ hath promised this great Salvation, must be acknowledged so highly reasonable, so extremely easy, that there will be no Pretence of Excuse left for that Man, no Possibility of his Escaping, that doth neglect it.

Especially, if we add to this, in the Second Place, The Universality with which it is offered.

It is tender'd most seriously and affectionately to all Sorts of Men: None are excluded; no, not the greatest Sinners. How bad soever our Lives have formerly been; how much soever our Consciences are oppressed with the Guilt of Sin: Yet if we will close with our Saviour's Terms, (and very easy ones you see they are,) he is ready to bestow his Salvation upon us. This also is another Consideration, which as it gives us the greatest Encouragement to set about this Work, so it will make us appear still more inexcusable and unpitiabie, if we do not. How shall we escape, if we neglect a Salvation which is tender'd so freely, so unreservedly to all Sinners, (even the greatest) without Exception?

It is a Sense of Guilt that oftentimes makes Men more guilty. It is Despair of Mercy that often stops up the Way to Amendment, and carries Men on to still more wicked and desperate Courses. But to have Hopes, nay, to have Assurance of Forgiveness and Mercy, must needs sure have quite other Effects.

For the Great God to proclaim his General Pardon to all his Rebellious Creatures;

nay, not only so, but to intreat them, to beseech them to accept of it, promising withal his Favour and Eternal Life, if they do: Sure this kind Usage is able to melt any Ingenuous Mind into the most willing and hearty Submissions. Sure he must be a strange Kind of Creature, that is not won by so much Goodness, to lay aside his Enmity against Heaven, and reconcile himself to his God, shall I say? or to his Tender-hearted Father.

O my Brethren, to consider the strange, surprizing, unexpected Mercy that is made over to Sinners in the Gospel; how ought it to affect us? How ought it to arouse the most stupid, insensible Mortals; and inflame them with a Desire of returning to their Gracious God, from whom they have so long wander'd in the Mazes of Folly and Sin.

It is not only the Righteous and Innocent, that shall have Benefit by the Blood of Christ: Those that through a Good Education, and a Vertuous Disposition, have, in a great Measure, escaped the Pollutions of the World, and have all their Lives long given up themselves to the Service of Jesus Christ: I say, it is not to these only, that the Mercies of the Gospel are extended; (though, of all others, these are the most happy People;) but the Gate is open, even to the Prodigal Children; those that have wasted all their Father's Substance

Substance in Lewdness, and Riotous Living: Even these the Father is ready to receive with open Arms, if they can but have the Heart to return to him.

O hearken to this and consider it, All you (if there be any such Persons here) that have hitherto lived Loosely and Carelessly; that have never minded God and his Religion, but have pursued a Course of Vice and Sensuality, and Wickedness, all your Lives long; that have given the Reins to your Brutish Passions and Appetites, and have, with a high Hand, affronted and provoked the Majesty of Heaven and Earth by your repeated Transgressions:

Yet, as Bad as you are; as loudly as your Sins do cry to Heaven for Vengeance, your Case is not desperate, if you can Repent.

Desperate, did I say? The Gate of Mercy is open to you, the Great God waits for you, and is ready to receive and embrace you.

Christ Jesus shed his Blood for you, even for you, and begs and intreats you to come and partake of the Benefits thereof.

The Angels of God do wish for your Conversion, and there will be Joy in Heaven at the News of it.

And all this, We that are the Minister's of Christ's Gospel, have Authority from him to publish and declare to you; and therefore we do beseech you, in Christ's Stead, that you would be reconciled unto God.

It is not yet too late. You may yet be everlastingly happy, if you will consider and turn. Christ yet offers you his Salvation. The Lord himself speaks to you; Wash, you, make you clean, put away the Evil of your Doings from before my Eyes; cease to do Evil, learn to do Well. And then, though your Sins be as Scarlet, they shall be as white as Snow; though they be red like Crimson, they shall be as Wooll.

Isa. i. 16,

O my Brethren; Having these kind Invitations; having these reviving Hopes, these Assurances of God's Mercy; Why should any of us be wicked any longer? Why should we go on a Step farther towards our own Undoing? Why should we not presently break loose from our Sins, and go whither our Gracious God so lovingly calls us, to his Mercy, to his Favour to our own Everlasting Salvation?

But if after all these astonishing Overtures of Grace and Goodness, you still harden your Hearts, and neglect this great Salvation; be you yourselves Judges, whether you shall deserve any Favour, any Pity or Compassion when you come most to need it; and when in the Anguish of your Souls, you bitterly cry out for it.

O, it will be a stinging Consideration one Day, to think of the Greatness of that Mercy that you do now reject: To think how often God called you, but you refused: How often he stretched forth his Hand, to have kept you from that Destruction you were so eagerly pursuing, but you did not regard him: How often he would have gathered you to him, as a Hen gathereth her Chickens under her Wings, but ye would not.

Then will you sadly wish, that you had, in this your Day understood the Things that belong to your Peace. But it will be too late, they will then be hid from your Eyes.

But Thirdly and Lastly, to Conclude. Our Neglect of Christ's Salvation will still appear more Criminal and Inexcusable, if we consider the Encouragement we have to set about it, upon Account of the great Assistances that God is ready to afford us for the obtaining of it.

It is natural for Men, when they are beaten out of other Excuses, to fetch Apologies for their Neglect or Slothfulness, in any Business that is press'd upon them from the Greatness of the Work, and their own want of Strength and Ability to go through it. And here it is, that the Sensual and Careless among us, notwithstanding what has been hitherto represented, will be apt to take Refuge.

Though Heaven (say they) be a Glorious Place, and the Way to it plainly enough described, yet it is a very Long Journey; and we must expect to meet with many Difficulties in it. Whatever you talk of the Reasonableness and the Easiness of that Course of Life that leads to it, yet we find by our own Trials, that it is very hard for Flesh and Blood to live after that Rate of Strictness.

The Temptations to Sin are every where so many, and so powerful; and our own Strength for the resisting of them, so little and inconsiderable; that we may in some Measure be excused, if we be not so forward in the Undertaking, or so successful in the managing of such an Affair as this.

But O, how vain are these Allegations! as if you had no Supports against these Discouragements; but Christ had left you to work out your Salvation entirely by your own Strength. Do but cast your Eyes upwards, and look at the mighty Succours which Christ Jesus holds forth to you; and you will confess, that were those Weaknesses you complain of, those Difficulties you have to conflict with, much more considerable than they are; yet they are not to be accounted of, they are not to be named, being so exceedingly overballanced by those Divine Powers and Aids which God will derive upon you, if you will seriously engage in this Work.

Christ Jesus hath not only Purchased a Kingdom for you, and taught you the Way to arrive to it, but he hath Purchased the Holy Spirit to be your continual Assistant in your Way thither.

He hath not only set you a Glorious Example, and bid you to follow him, but he hath sent down the Holy Ghost, as his Vicegerent upon Earth, to conduct you to that Blessed Place where he is.

You have the Grace and the Presence of the Living God always ready at Hand, if you seriously Pray for it, to strengthen your Weaknesses, to assist your Endeavours, to enlighten your Minds, to fortify your Wills, to excite your Affections, to support you under all Temptations, and, in a Word, to Fight all the Lord's Battels with you; provided you be Sincere and Honest, in the Prosecution of that Glorious Warfare, which God hath called you out into.

What can you desire more than this? God hath promised, That he will never Heb. xiii. leave you, nor forsake you. You are assured 5. by his Apostle, That greater is he that is in 1 John iv. you, than he that is in the World. And 4. another Apostle doubts not to affirm, That nothing shall be able to separate you from the Rom. viii. Love of God, which is in Christ Jesus. 38, 39. Nei- ther

ther Death, nor Life, nor Angels, nor Principalities, nor Powers, nor Things present, nor Things to come, nor Height, nor Depth, nor any other Creature. Nothing under Heaven, except your selves, can do you any Mischief.

And now this being our Case; what must be said of us, if we be not Vertuous and Happy? How shall we think to escape, if we neglect a Salvation, for the obtaining of which, we have such mighty Succours and Assistance afforded to us.

O let these Considerations fire us into brave and worthy Thoughts! Let us make no more vain Excuses. Let us no longer pretend I know not what Difficulties; but let us chearfully and resolvedly apply our selves to the working out our Salvation; knowing, That as it is God which worketh in us the Will, so the same God will also work in us the Power of doing it.

We have no reason to be afraid of any Thing; to be discouraged at any Thing. For God Almighty is with us; God Almighty that made us, still takes Care of us. And is ready for ever to assist all his faithful Servants in all their Extremities.

Christ Jesus, our High-Priest, sits at the Right Hand of God, and continually makes Intercession for us.

The Holy Spirit never fails to vouchsafe his Presence in the Souls of all well-disposed Persons, to carry them through all

Dan-

Dangers, through all Difficulties, through all Temptations.

In a Word, we need fear nothing, so long as we design and resolve well, and endeavour to do well. For both Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, have engaged themselves in the Salvation of all such Persons. To which Eternal God, &c.

L U K E xxii. 19.

—This do in Remembrance of me.

I Hope it will not be thought unseasonable, if on this Day, on which our Saviour suffered, I entertain you with a Discourse of that Holy Sacrament, which was on purpose instituted by him, for the Commemoration of those his Sufferings. For as this Argument will lead me to treat of most of those Things which are the proper Subjects of our Meditations at this Time;

Time; so considering that all of us who are Religiously disposed, are preparing ourselves to partake of that Holy Feast on Easter-Day; a Sermon upon that Mystery may be of some Use to us in that respect: Especially, it being an Argument which is not often treated of in this Place.

Three Things I beg leave to lay before you, relating to this Sacrament.

First, The Obligation that lies upon all Christians to Communicate in it, and to Communicate frequently.

Secondly, The Benefits and Advantages we shall receive by so practising.

Thirdly, The little or no Weight that there is in the common Pretences, which usually keep People from this frequent Communicating.

I begin with the First Thing; viz. The Obligation that lies upon all Christians to receive the Sacrament, and to receive it frequently. And here I take my Rise from our Saviour's Words that I have now read to you, Do this (saith he) in Remembrance of me. These are the Words by which he did institute or appoint for ever this Sacred Mystery of the Communion. Here he gives a Commandment to his Disciples, that they should do this in Remembrance of him. But what is it they must do? Why, the Words going before do inform us. They must do that which Christ

Christ now did; that is, they must take Bread, and bless it, and break it, and give it: This they must do in Remembrance of Christ. Now if it was the Duty of the Apostles, and those that succeeded them in the Ministry of the Church, thus to take Bread, and bless it, and break it, and give it; then certainly it must be the Duty of all Christians committed to their Care, to receive, and eat the Bread so taken, and blessed, and broken, and given, in Remembrance of Christ. And the same likewise as to the Cup, which our Saviour appointed to go along with it.

You see then, in the First Place, That the receiving of the Sacrament is a necessary and a perpetual Duty, incumbent upon all Christians. For it is expressly commanded by our Saviour; and the Reason of the Command doth extend to all Persons, and to all Ages of the World. Do this, says he, in Remembrance of me. And to the same Purpose St. Paul (1 Cor. xi. 26.) As often as ye eat this Bread, and drink this Cup, ye do shew forth the Lord's Death till he come. If now it be a perpetual Duty to remember Christ; if it be a perpetual Duty to shew forth his Death till he comes; then it must of necessity be a Duty, to make use of those Symbols and Ceremonies that he hath appointed to remember him, and to shew forth his Death by; and it must be a Duty thus to do to the World's End, because Christ is not to come till then. And further; If it be a Duty to remember Christ, and to shew forth his Death frequently; and the more frequently we do it, the better Christians we are, (as is on all Hands acknowledged :) Then, in the same Degree and Proportion, ought we to think ourselves obliged to a frequent Participation of this Sacrament.

But Secondly, That we should thus join in giving and receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, in Remembrance of Christ, is not only his express Command; but such a Command, that, if we consider the Time in which it was given, and the Circumstances likewise with which he gave it, we cannot but be sensible that we ought to have a most especial particular Regard to it. This was in a Manner the last Command he gave to his Disciples. He was now a going to part from them, and to do the greatest Kindness for Mankind that ever was done. He was a going to lay down his Life, as an Offering for the Sins of Men, and by his Death to procure everlasting Salvation for them; and now, at parting, he desires this particular Thing of them, which he would have observed by them, and all that came after them; namely, That in Memory of him they would blefs Bread and Wine, and eat and drink drink them for his Sake. Ought not these Circumstances to be a strange Endearment of this Institution, to all that profess themselves his Disciples? Will not every good-natur'd ingenuous Man that considers these Things, be naturally apt to put a more than ordinary Value upon those dear Pledges that our Dying Saviour hath thus bequeathed to us? Or is it possible that any one can so much as pretend to love our Lord Jesus, and yet be so insensible of his last Commands, and the Circumstances wherewith they were given, as to live in a constant and wilful Neglect of them?

But this is not all that doth recommend this Duty to us. There is this farther Thing in the Third Place to be considered: This is in a Manner the peculiar Command of our Saviour, the only proper Act of Christian Worship that he hath appointed. To assemble together in Publick for the Service of God; for the asking Pardon for our Sins; for the begging Mercies and Favours from him; for the returning our Thanks, and Praises, and Acknowledgments for Benefits received; and also for the receiving Instructions and Admonitions about our Moral Conversation, and the Truths and Duties of our Religion, is common to all the Religions in the World: Both Jews and Turks do this as well as Christians. But to join together in Commemorating the Death of Christ, is the peculiar Duty that is incumbent on us, as we profess to be the Followers of Jesus. It is the distinguishing Badge of our Profession. It is an Act of Worship that our Lord hath ordained, for our Evidencing to all the World that we are His Disciples, and that we own Him to be our Lord and Master. And therefore, tho' in our other Offices of Devotion, we may be truly said to Worship God, and to give Honour to our Saviour; yet we cannot be said so properly to Worship as Christians, except we joyn in those Sacred Mysteries that Christ has made peculiar to his own Religion. And upon this Account it was, that the Primitive Christians looked upon this Service of the Communion as so necessary, so essential a Part of the Christian Worship, that they never held their Publick Assemblies without it; and none of the Faithful in those Days, that came to Prayers, went away till they had been Partakers of the Sacrament. This Consideration surely ought to lay a mighty Obligation upon all that call themselves by the Name of Christ, and would be thought his daily Worshipers, to omit no Opportunity that is offered them, of doing Homage to their Saviour in this Way.

But Fourthly and Lastly, To give you a farther Argument of our Obligation to the frequent Practice of this Duty, let me a little more particularly insist on the End for which this Sacrament was instituted, as it is here assigned by our Saviour. Do this, says he, in Remembrance of me. The great Business of this Sacred Mystery is to Commemorate the Death of our Lord, and the Benefits we receive thereby, and to express our Thankfulness to God, and him for them. Now can any Man profess himself a Christian, and yet not think himself obliged to take every Occasion of doing this? Nay, and to be glad when such an Occasion is offered? Doth all the great Love of our Saviour in laying down his Life, and thereby purchasing Eternal Happiness for us, not deserve so much as a Remembrance? Are there no Thanks due to him, for the inexpressible Humiliation of himself, to take our Flesh upon him? And in that Flesh to undergo God knows how many Sorrows and Afflictions for our sakes; and at last for our sakes to expose himself to an Ignominious Tormenting Crucifixion; that through his stripes we might be healed; through his Death we might obtain Life? What, I say, is not all this worthy of some Remembrance? Some Thanks? Yes certainly, every one among us, that believes Christ to have done and suffered all this for us, must needs think we ought to remember this great Kindness ness as long as we live, and to give him continual Thanks for it. But yet let me tell you, the only Solemn Way that he hath appointed for our Commemoration of these his Benefits, and expressing our Thankfulness for them, is this of receiving the Sacrament. Do this in Remembrance of me. This is the great Purpose and Intent of it. This is the Way in which Christ will be remembered and thanked for his Favours. And sure it is very idle to think of any other Methods than what he himself hath appointed; and they must be intolerably ungrateful, that will not do thus much for him. If our Saviour, for the Commemoration of his Benefits, and the shewing our Thankfulness for them, had commanded us some extremely severe Thing; (as among several of the Pagan Nations their Commemorative Mysteries, in Honour of their Deities, were cruel and severe enough;) we might then, indeed, have had some colourable Excuse for our seldom or unfrequent Expressions of our Obedience to his Commands. But now, when he requires no more of us, than to come to his Table, and there to eat and drink in Remembrance of him, and in Token of our Thankfulness to him, they must either be no Believers, or have very little Sense of his Kindness, that can easily absent themselves, and deny him such Expressions of their Gratitude.

I must confess to you these Things seem to me to carry so much Weight and Force in them, that I cannot but wonder how it comes to pass that our *Communion*s are generally so little frequented; nay, that they are not as full as our Assemblies for Prayers or Sermons: The Duty being so very necessary, and the Performance of it so little troublesome, and withal the Benefits that accrue to us from the due Performance of it, being so many, and so great. Of which I now come to speak; that being the Second Head I am to discourse of.

In the Second Place; As for the Benefits and Advantages which we shall reap by a conscientious Discharge of our Duty in this Matter, they are truly Great, I may say Unvaluable. Indeed, in all the Instances wherein God has laid his Commands upon us, we may, from the Obedience we yield to them, certainly promise to ourselves great Blessings and Rewards; for all God's Commandments are for our good, and not for his. But this holds in none more than in this particular Instance we are now speaking of. Three Things I shall briefly represent to you upon this Head. And they are of so great Moment, that whoever considers them, cannot but be convinced that it is extremely to his own Loss and Prejudice, that he doth at any time neglect the Opportunities opportunities that are afforded him of approaching to the Lord's Table.

First of all, The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is the great and solemn Means that Christ has appointed in his Church to all Christians, for the obtaining the Pardon and Forgiveness of their Sins committed since their Baptism. As the Sacrament of Baptism was Instituted by Christ, for the entering Men into Covenant with God; by the Means whereof, all the Sins they were guilty of before they became Christians were forgiven: So this other Sacrament of his Supper was Instituted for the Renewing that Covenant with God; by the Means whereof, all their Sins since their Baptism are remitted to them, and a Conveyance likewise made of all the other Benefits of Christ's Sacrifice on the Cross.

This is the Doctrine of the Catholick Church in this Matter of the Two Sacraments. And it will receive some Light from the Two great Sacraments among the Jews, Circumcision and Sacrifices, which were eminent Types and Figures of our Baptism, and the Lord's Supper.

Among the Jews, the Way that God appointed for the entering Persons into Covenant with him, was Circumcision: And whoever was Circumcised, was entitled thereby to all the Benefits and Advantages that were promised and made over by that Covenant. And the same Thing we say, as to all those that are entred into the New Covenant of Jesus Christ by Baptism. Well now, but if an Israelite thus entred into Covenant with God, happen'd afterwards to transgress any Law of God; before he could obtain Forgiveness, and be restored to God's Favour, he must offer such Sacrifices as the Law had appointed in that Case: And by offering these Sacrifices he renewed his Covenant with God, and was admitted to that State which by his Sin he had forfeited. And the very Way of offering up these Sacrifices, did very lively represent this. For when a Man brought any of this Kind of Sacrifices; after that Sacrifice had been offered to God, Part of it was burnt upon the Altar, which was God's Portion; and another Part of it was given back to the Man that brought it, for him to Feast upon with his Family. By which was signified, That the Man thus eating of God's Meat, and feeding, as it were, at God's Table, was restored to his Grace and Favour, and in Covenant with him: Eating and drinking together, being the Ceremony used among all Nations, for the expressing Friendship and Reconciliation, and for the ratifying Leagues and Covenants.

Now to the same Use and Purpose (say we) serves our Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; or, as it was called by the Antients, tients, the Christian Sacrifice. Not that we pretend in our Communion to Offer up the Real Body and Blood of Christ in Sacrifice to God, as the Papists do: For that (as the Apostle tells us) was once done by himself upon the Cross, and by that one Offering he hath for ever perfected all them that are sanctified; so that there is no need of any such Offering any more: But we Commemorate that Sacrifice which Christ has on this Day made for us; and we thank God for it; and we heartily beseech him, that he would accept of it on our Behalf, and that it may make Attonement for all our Sins: And we likewise feed upon it (as the Jews did upon their Sacrifices;) that is to say, by eating of that Bread which he made to be his Body, and drinking of that Cup which he made to be his Blood. Now, in doing of this, we may be truly said both to Offer up a Sacrifice to God, and likewise to keep a Feast upon this Sacrifice. We Offer up, by Commemoration and Thanksgiving, and hearty Prayer, that Sacrifice that was once offered by Jesus Christ at Jerusalem near Seventeen hundred Years ago, for the Salvation of all Mankind. And we partake both of the Body and Blood of that his Sacrifice, by partaking of the Bread and Wine that he has Consecrated not only to be the Symbols and Signs of them, but to Convey the real

Benefits of his Passion and Sacrifice to all Believers. So that we may be truly said to feed at God's Table, whenever we receive the Sacrament: And if we come worthily disposed, to have all our past Sins blotted out, and to be received into his Grace, and Favour, and Friendship: Which is all that I mean by Renewing our Covenant with him.

But that I may not seem to ground so Important a Doctrine as this is, merely upon the Types and Figures of the Old Testament, I ought to tell you, That all I have said, is sufficiently clear both from our Saviour's own Words in the Institution of this Sacrament, and likewise from St. Paul. Our Saviour calls the Cup of the Sacrament, The New Covenant in his Blood: Or, as it is in another Evangelist, The Blood of the New Covenant, which was shed for many for the Remission of Sins. St. Paul likewise tells us, That the Cup of Blessing which we bless, and the Bread which we break, is the Communion of the Body and Blood of Christ: The Sense of which is plainly this, That these Sacred Signs make them that use them, to have Communion with Christ Crucified. The Partaking of the Bread, and of the Cup, is the Means that God hath appointed for our Partaking of the Benefits of Christ's Body that was Broken, and of his Blood that was Shed for us; that is to say, The Forgiveness

ness of our Sins, and all the other Fruits and Advantages of his Passion.

Is not this now a Consideration that should strongly oblige all Christians to a frequent Participation of this Sacrament? Can any thing more recommend this Ordinance to us, than the Thoughts that it cancels all the Scores between God and us, provided we come prepared as we ought to be? That it puts us into a State of his Favour, and enters us into so strict a League of Friendship with him, as not all the Powers of Earth and Hell can dissolve, unless we ourselves be Traitors to ourselves.

These are great Things; but these are not all. For, in the Second Place, another Advantage we have by the Sacrament is, That it is in itself an excellent Instrument for the making Men grow in Vertue and Goodness.

That serious Reflection upon a Man's own Ways; that careful Examination and Enquiry into the State of his own Soul; those Expressions of Sorrow and Repentance for what he finds amiss in himself; and the earnest Prayers he makes to God for his Grace, together with the hearty Resolutions he enters into, of a better Obedience for the future: All which Things are necessary Preparations for the worthy Partaking of this Solemn Mystery, especially in one that comes but seldom to
it;

The Sixth Sermon.

it; (for indeed the Case is otherwise as to those that fo Live as to be always Prepared for it, and accordingly do take all Occasions of Receiving it :) I say, these Things are the likeliest Means in the World not only to keep up in a Man, the Sense of Vertue and Piety towards God, but also to restore it, when through Carelesness it is in a Manner quite lost; or, if it be not lost or decayed, to increase and advance it, and to make it much clearer and brighter than ever it was.

O how ought this Consideration to prevail with all Persons that make a Conscience of Religion, and endeavour to serve God as well as they can, and mean to persevere in that Course of Life; to take every Occasion that is offered to partake of this Divine Ordinance. Such is the Nature of our Souls while they are pent up in these Earthly Tabernacles, and surrounded with sensible Objects, that the Spiritual Impressions that are stamp't upon them, must be continually renewed, or else, in a little Time, they will be quite defaced and lost. The most ardent Love to God and Vertue will by degrees flag and grow cold, unless it be by some Means or other frequently excited. Wisely therefore, and admirably for our Advantage, hath our Lord Jesus contrived this Means of the Holy Sacrament, for the preventing venting or remedying these Inconveniencies. By obliging us to a frequent Communication in this Divine Office, he hath put us upon the Necessity of so often thinking and meditating on Spiritual Matters, of impressing upon our Souls all those Arguments that at first prevailed with us to enter upon a Course of Vertue, and of reinforcing all our Vows and Resolutions to give up ourselves to the Service of God; that it will not be an easie Matter to forget our Duty, or to relapse from our good Purposes.

And the Nature of the Myſtery itself is such, that nothing in the World can be better contrived for the attaining these Ends; that is to say, for the working in us a perfect Hatred of all Sin and Wickedness, and raising up our Affections to the most passionate Love of our Saviour. Since there we have, in the most sensible Manner, represented to us, the infinite unspeakable Kindness that the Son of God expressed to the Sons of Men, in laying down his Life for them; and the infinite Malignity that is in Sin, which was so odious to the pure Eyes of God, that nothing less than the Blood of his own Son could make Expiation for it.

Whoever therefore is now piously disposed, and intends to go on in that good Way, and to grow better and better, let him as frequently as he can make Use of this Means which God hath appointed for these very Ends. This is the best Way to make the Grain of Mustard-Seed, sown in our Hearts, to become a great Tree. This is the surest Method, not only to keep the smoking Flax from being quenched, but to make it blaze out in Flames.

Which we shall be farther convinced of, if we consider, in the Third Place, another Advantage which we reap by this Sacrament; and that is this, That it doth not only minister to the promoting Piety and Holiness, by making us more serious, and putting us more upon the Exercise of Devotion; but also, in this respect, that it is a Means whereby more Grace and Strength is derived to us from the Holy Spirit of Christ.

We have already said, That our Lord ordained this Sacrament as the general Instrument whereby he would actually apply to Believers all the Benefits of his Passion. Now the Benefits that Christ purchased for us by his Death, were not only the Pardon of our Sins, of which we have spoken before, but also the Grace and Assistance of his Holy Spirit, in order to our performing those Conditions which he hath required of us. Now as the partaking of this Sacrament is the standing ordinary Means of receiving the former Benefit, namely, the Pardon of our Sins; so is it also of receiving the latter; that is, is, the Strength, and Support, and Influences of the Holy Spirit. By partaking of these Holy Mysteries as we should do, we are made one with Christ, and Christ with us, as our Church expresses it; we become living Branches of the true Vine, and, consequently, derive all that vital Juice and Sap from Christ our Root, that is needful for our bringing forth good Fruit. This is the proper Method to allure down the Divine Spirit of Jesus to come and dwell with us; to oblige him to take up his Habitation in our Hearts, so that we shall be truly the Temples of the Living God.

O what an Inducement ought this to be to us to make ourselves constant Guests at this Holy Feast! Since we may there get Strength against all our Infirmities, Physick for all our Diseases, Support against all the Evils that oppress us. Are there any of us that are hard put to it, either through the prevailing Infirmities of our Natures, or those that our evil Customs have brought upon us? Are there any of us that want Strength or Courage to grapple with our Spiritual Enemies, or to resist those Temptations that daily make Assaults upon us in our Way of Living? Why here we may have Remedy. By coming frequently, and conscientiously, and devoutly to this Feast of God, we may gain such Refreshment, such

Support,

Support, such Strength and Power, as will enable us to go through our Work chearfully and successfully ; such Succours as will not fail, if we faithfully make use of them, to vanquish all our Spiritual Adversaries ; and lastly, such Comfort and Peace of Mind as will make our Lives tolerably easie under all the Difficulties, and Troubles, and Calamities of this miserable World.

And now these Considerations, one would think, should sufficiently recommend the frequent Practice of this Piece of Religion to all of us, that have either any Love to God, or Regard to their own Happiness. But notwithstanding all this, there are some such fatal Prejudices that Men have too often taken up concerning this Sacrament, that all Discourses of this Nature are generally ineffectual. Some of these therefore I shall endeavour, in the Third and Last Place, to remove out of the Way, and so conclude.

The Prejudices and Misapprehensions that Men lie under as to this Business, and which usually fright them from coming to the Sacrament, are very many ; but the greatest and most common of them, are these Two following. The general Sense that Men have of their own Unfitness to receive it ; and the infinite Danger they run, if they should happen to Receive Unworthily. Upon these Two Accounts it is, that many that are otherwise well-disposed Persons,

Persons, dare not come to the Lord's Table. They are so affrighted with the Apprehension of their own Guilt, and their Unworthiness to partake of so Solemn a Mystery; and likewise with the terrible Punishment that is threatned to all those that Receive Unworthily; that they think it much better wholly to absent themselves from the Sacrament, than run the Hazard they must do, by taking it in the Circumstances they are. These Two Things I shall, at this Time, briefly speak to.

And First, It is commonly urged, by the Generality of Men, as an Excuse for absenting themselves from the Sacrament, That they are no way qualified for it. They are not in a Condition of coming to the Lord's Table, by reason of the Remissness and Carelesness of their Lives, and their falling so many Degrees short of that Holiness the Gospel of Christ requires of them.

But to this, let me say, in the First Place, Whose Fault is this? Why do we not all live better? Who hinders us from being so good as we ought to be? Either it is in our Power to live so, as may put us into a Condition of worthily performing this Instance of our Duty to our Lord, or it is not in our Power. If it be in our Power, then we cannot in the least plead this for an Excuse of our not doing it: If it be not in our Power, then we can contract no new Guilt by coming to Receive, tho' we should prove to Receive Unworthily, provided we have done the best we can. But, in God's Name, how dare we live at such a Rate, that we are incapable of joyning in the Principal Part of the Christian Worship? Nothing in the World can unqualify us for that, but what, at the same Time, doth render us unqualified for the Kingdom of Heaven. And dare we live so, that, if God should this Day call us out of the World, we should think ourselves in a State of Damnation?

But Secondly, Tho' we do not live so well as we desire; tho' our Lives be not so Holy, and so Pure, and so Heavenly, as may become the Partakers of so Divine a Mystery as that of the Sacrament is; yet let us not for this wholly absent ourselves from it: Nay, rather let us come the oftner to it; for that is the Means to make us better. It is the most effectual Course we can take to promote Vertue and Piety in ourselves. Whereas, if we never come at all, we take the direct Way to be always as bad as we are, or rather to grow worse and worse.

Would any one advise a sensual careless Man, by no means to take a Bible into his Hands, or to come to Prayers, or to hear Sermons; because he is very unfit for, and unworthy of such Exercises? No surely, surely, he will rather propose the Use of these Things to such a Person, as a singular Means to gain him to Vertue and Sobriety. The very same Thing we may say of the Use of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. It may, and often doth, prove a happy Expedient, through the Mercy of God, to make those Good that were not so before.

I speak not this to encourage any vicious, evil Liver to approach to this Ordinance, if he thinks of continuing in his Sins. No, very unfit it is that That Holy Bread should be given to such unclean Creatures. But this is that I would say, Let none upon Account of their fore-past Lives, be discouraged from doing their Duty to God in this Ordinance. On the contrary, if they can be truly sorry for their Sins, and heartily resolve with the Grace of God to forsake them, Let them come with Chearfulness to the Lord's Table, not doubting but God will kindly receive them, and will give them such Grace and Strength, that if they will make use of it, they shall not fail of being true Converts to Holiness and Piety.

But it is said, in the Second Place, That the Sin of unworthy Receiving is so great, and the Punishment threatned to it so grievous, that it seems safer not to Receive at all, than to run such a desperate Hazard. This is another Consideration that frights many from the Sacrament, tho' otherwise well-disposed Persons. That Passage of St. Paul is always running in their Minds, (1 Cor xi. 29.) He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh Damnation to himself. This is the Text that frights them. But now as to this, I pray let it be considered:

In the First Place, Those among us that are so fearful of coming to the Sacrament, are in no Danger at all of Receiving Unworthily; in the Sense that St. Paul useth this Term. For the unworthy Receiving that he so severely censures in the Corinthians, was their approaching to the Lord's Table with so little a Sense of what they were about, that, as he here expresseth it, they did not discern the Lord's Body: That is to say, they made no Distinction between the Bread of the Sacrament, and Common Food. Things were then at that pass among the Corinthians, that when they met together to Receive the Sacrament, (which, in those Days, was usually usher'd in by a Common Feast of Rich and Poor together) they used the Church more like an Eating or Tipling-House, than the House of God. This you may see in the 20th Verse of that Chapter: When (saith he) ye come together into one Place, this is not to eat the Lord's Supper. For in eating, every one takes before other his own Supper, and one is hungry, and another is drunken. What, have ye

ye not Houses to eat and drink in, or despise ye the Church of God? What shall I say to you? Shall I praise you in this? I praise you not. Thus far St. Paul, in that Place. Now sure such an Unworthy, Irreverent, Profane Carriage as this, at the Receiving the Holy Sacrament, might justly deserve that severe Censure that he there passeth upon it: He that eateth and drinketh thus unworthily, eateth and drinketh Damnation to himself, because he discerneth not the Lord's Body. But, I hope, there is none of those among us that are so very scrupulous about coming to the Sacrament, can be in any Danger of Profaning it after this Manner.

But Secondly, The Damnation which St. Paul here denounceth, is not perhaps so frightful as is commonly apprehended. For all that he saith, if the Original be consulted, will appear to be no more than this; He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh Judgment to himself; meaning hereby, That he who doth thus affront our Lord's Institution, by making no Distinction between the Bread of the Sacrament, and Common Food, doth by this his Profaneness, draw down severe Judgments from God upon his own Head: For, for this Cause (saith he in the next Words) many are weak and sickly among you, and many are fallen asleep. But here is not a Word of Everlasting Damnation; much less of any Man's being concluded in that State, by Receiving Unworthily: Unless one will say, That all those who are visited by God's Judgments in this World, shall be damned in the next; which is so far from being true, that St. Paul, in this very Place, affirms the contrary, namely, in Verse 32. where he tells us, That when we are thus judged (in this World) we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the World.

But Thirdly, Admitting St. Paul, in these Words to mean Damnation in our usual Sense; yet still the utmost they can come to, will be no more than this; That whosoever eateth and drinketh thus unworthily, as the Corinthians did, is guilty of a Damnabie Sin. But now there are a great many other Cases, besides this of the Sacrament, in which a Man is guilty of a Damnabie Sin, if he do not perform his Duty as he ought to do. He that Prays or Hears Unworthily, or in any Instance performs the Worship of God, or professeth the Christian Religion Unworthily: I say, such a Man, according to the Protestant Doctrine, may be said to do these Things to his own Damnation, upon the same Account that he is said to Eat and Drink his own Damnation that Communicates Unworthily in the Sacrament; though perhaps, not in so high a Degree. That is to say, Such a Man is guilty of a Sin that is in its own
Nature

Nature Damnable; and may prove so to him, unless either by a particular or general Repentance, he obtains God's Pardon for it. But yet for all this; there is no Man will for these Reasons think it advisable to leave off the Practice of these Duties. But the only Consequence he will draw from hence, is, that he is so much the more concerned to take Care that he perform them as he ought to do.

But Fourthly and Lastly, to conclude; Let the Sin of coming to the Sacrament Unworthily, be as Great and as Damnable as we can reasonably suppose it; yet this is that we contend for; the Sin of totally withdrawing from it, is Greater and more Damnable: So that if he who partakes of it Unworthily, doth Eat and Drink Damnation to himself; he that Partakes not at all, is so far from mending the Matter, that he doth increase that Damnation. The Truth of this Assertion depends upon that known Rule of Casuistical Divinity, That it is a greater Sin to omit a known Duty altogether, than to perform that Duty as well as we can, though with much Unworthiness.

But I dare hold you no longer upon this Argument; I would only say this, and I have done. Though I am far from encouraging any to approach the Lord's Table without due Qualifications; or from extenuating any Man's Sin that comes un- worthily, (unworthily, I mean in the Scripture Sense of the Word, and not as it is understood by some People among us :) Yet this I say, That if Men did seriously consider what a Sin it is to live without the Sacrament; it being an apparent Neglect, and looking like a Contempt of our Saviour's Institution, and a Renouncing the Worship of God, and the Communion of the Church, in the great Instance of Christian Worship and Christian Communion: And withal, what terrible Consequences they bring upon themselves thereby, even the depriving themselves of the Chief of those ordinary Means which our Lord hath appointed for the obtaining Remission of Sins, and the Grace and Influences of the Holy Spirit: I say, if Men did seriously consider these Things, they would not look upon it as so slight a Matter, voluntarily to Excommunicate themselves from the Society of the Faithful, as to the Partaking in this Great Duty and Privilege of Christians; but what Apprehensions soever they had, of the Sin and Danger of Receiving unworthily, they would, for all that, think it more Sinful and more Dangerous not to Receive at all.

I pray God give us all Grace, seriously to consider these Things, and so enlighten our Minds, and dispose our Wills by his Holy Spirit, that laying aside all Prejudices dices and Sloth, and Carnal Affections, we may sincerely apply our selves to serve God constantly and diligently, in this, and all the other Instances that he hath commanded us; to the Glory of his Blessed Name, and to our own great Comfort, and Increase in Piety and Vertue. This, God of his Infinite Mercy grant, &c.

SERMON VII.

Preached before the QUEEN

A T

St. JAMES's Chapel,

ON CHRISTMAS-DAY, 1704.

I JOHN iii. 8.

—For this Purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the Works of the Devil.

WHAT is here meant by the Works of the Devil, is plain from the former Part of the Verse. He that committeth Sin (saith the Apostle) is of the Devil; for the Devil sinned from the Beginning; and then it follows, for this Purpose was the Son of God manifested, that that he might destroy the Works of the Devil. So that the Works of the Devil are all manner of Sin and Wickedness; and consequently the destroying of the Works of the Devil, must mean the destroying out of Mankind all Sin and Wickedness, and in the Place thereof, planting in them all manner of Vertue and Holiness. And this the Apostle here affirms to be the great End of Christ's coming into the World.

It is the same Account of Christ's Undertaking, in other Words that St. Paul gives us in the Second to Titus, Christ therefore gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all Iniquity, and purifie to himself a peculiar People zealous of good Works. And the same Account likewise that St. Peter gives of it in the Third of the Acts, Unto you first (saith he) God having raised up his Son Jesus, (that great Prophet whom God, by Moses, promised to raise up to his People) hath sent him to bless you in turning away every one of you from his Iniquities. Lastly, It is the same Account that Zacharias gives us of the Design of our Lord's Coming into the World, in the First of St. Luke, Namely, That we being delivered from the Hands of our [Spiritual] Enemies, might serve God without Fear, in Holiness and Righteousness before him all the Days of our Life.

It were to be wished, that this was more considered and lay'd to Heart by all of us that profess to be Christ's Disciples. If it was, it would be impossible for many of us to lead such Lives as we do, without the utmost Confusion, and the continual Reproaches of our own Consciences. But whilst other Sorts of Accounts have been taken up concerning Christ's Undertaking, and the Design of his Religion, so different from that which my Text, and the other Passages I have quoted do give of it: Whilst Men have represented our Saviour to themselves, as one that was sent rather to free them from the Punishment of their Sins, than from the Power and Dominion of them; as one that came not so much to make them really righteous in their own Persons, as to impute his own Righteousness to them; and to fulfill the Law of God for them, rather than to oblige them to a more strict Obedience to it: Whilst they have been willing to look upon his Gospel, not as a practical Institution to teach us, and oblige us to live well, or as the Means appointed by God for the reforming the Manners of Mankind; but only, as a System of Propositions to be believed and professed, together with some few outward Precepts to be practised by us, in order to the distinguishing us from the rest of the World: Whilst, I say, we have entertain'd tain'd such Notions as these concerning the Religion of our Lord Jesus Christ; it is no Wonder that it hath no greater Effect upon Mens Lives, than we see it has at this Day; but is become a barren, evanid, ineffectual Thing, a Matter of Words and Dispute, a mere piece of Book-learning, a Name to distinguish Parties by, and little more.

Give me Leave therefore, at this Time, and on this Day, on which we are met to commemorate the Son of God's being manifested in the Flesh, to Discourse to you of the great End and Design of this his Manifestation, as it is here declared to us by his Apostle. This I am sure, as it is a proper Argument for the Season; so if it be well considered, it will effectually keep us from placing our Christianity in such Things as we see Men commonly do; and will oblige us, above all Things, to a serious and hearty Endeavour after universal Vertue and Sanctity; it being certain that the planting of this in us, and the destroying out of us all Sin and Wickedness, which are the proper Works of the Devil, was the great End of Christ's coming into the World, and of the Religion which he set on Foot among Men.

This is the Point therefore, that I shall endeavour to make out at this Time. And in order to the so doing, it will be sufficient to shew these Two Things.

First,

First, That this was an End and Design most worthy of the Son of God, to propose to himself in his Undertakings for Mankind, And Secondly, That the History of our Lord, and the Religion he instituted, do all along, throughout the whole Structure and Contrivance of them, visibly express such a Design.

I begin with the First, that to deliver Men from the Bondage of their Sins, and to restore their Natures to a State of Vertue and Holiness, was a Design most worthy of the Son of God to propose to himself in his Undertakings for Mankind. Now the Truth of this will appear, if we either consider how necessary, how essential an Ingredient Holiness is to the Happiness of Mankind; or on the other Side, how impossible it is in the Nature of the Thing, for any Man to be happy that is under the Power and Dominion of Sin: For from hence it will be evident, that if our Saviour's Errand into the World, was to serve the Interests of Mankind, he could propose no Design to himself more glorious, more worthy of the Son of God, than this that we are speaking of.

And First, Let us see how much a holy Divine Frame of Soul, contributes to our Happiness. I pray what doth the chief Happiness of any Being consist in; but in these Two Things? In having its Nature advanced to the greatest Perfection tion it is capable of; and Secondly, In being put into the Possession of the greatest Good it can enjoy. Let us now apply this to Mankind. And First, I ask what is the highest Excellence and Perfection that Human Nature is capable of? Is it not to be made as like unto God as is possible? There is no doubt of it. The Measure of all created Excellency and Perfection, can be nothing else but the Divine Nature, which is Perfection itself; and therefore the Nearest Approach that any Nature can make to that, is a State of the utmost Perfection that that Nature can arrive to: But now there is nothing in the World by which we can approach nearer unto God, nothing that can give us a greater Resemblance of his Nature, than those Moral Accomplishments of the Mind we are speaking of, that is to say, universal Purity and Righteousness and Goodness. For as on the One Hand, these are the Things that constitute the very Being of the Divine Life, and are (if one may so speak) the Top, the Flower of all the Perfections that are in God's Nature: So on the other Hand, these are the only Qualities in which it is possible for Mankind to imitate him. Our Natures will not admit that we should be Infinite, Independent, Omnipotent and Omniscient, as God is: But we may be, nay, we are commanded to be Holy

Holy, as God is Holy, Merciful, as God is Merciful, and perfect in the inward Goodness and Rectitude of our Minds, as our Heavenly Father is perfect. That is the First Thing,

And then, Secondly, As for the being put into the Possession of the greatest Good we are capable of, which is the other Part of the chief Happiness, and without which, indeed, all Excellency of Nature would not signify very much: forasmuch as no Creature, how excellent soever, is Self-sufficient: As for this I say, I ask again, whether there can be a greater Good than God? if not, then, whether he that is put into a Condition of enjoying God, be not put into the Possession of the greatest Good he is capable of? It certainly must be granted. But now I say, it is true Holiness and Goodness only, that can put Mankind into a Capacity of enjoying God; nay, not only so, but doth put those that are endowed with it into an actual Enjoyment of him. [In some Degree in this Life, but in Fullness and Perfection hereafter.] For pray, wherein consists the Enjoyment of God? Doth it not consist in loving him with all our Heart, and Soul, and Strength, and rejoicing in the Sense of his Love to us; in being inwardly and powerfully affected with his Presence, with his Goodness, with all his Excellencies; and in a Word,

Word, in having one Mind and one Will with him? But what is all this, but either the very Essence, or the proper and natural Exercise of that Holiness and Goodness we are now discoursing of? As therefore before we saw that true Holiness makes us like unto God: So by what has been now said, we see that it inseparably unites us to him; and thereby makes that inexhausted Fountain of all Good to be as much ours as our Capacities will admit of. And still the more holy, the more pure, the more devout we grow, still we shall more and more enjoy God, and so for ever and ever.

There needs no more to be said for the shewing how necessary, how essential true Goodness is to the Happiness of Mankind. I do not here say that this alone will make a Man compleatly happy: For Human Nature being made up of Soul and Body, there must be a great many other Things taken Care of, besides the Holiness and Purity of the Mind, in order to the rendring that Compound which we call Man, entirely happy. And the providing for these likewise, was one Part of our Saviour's Business in the World. But seeing the main Things required to our Happiness are those we have been speaking of, it was necessary that he should, in the First Place, provide for them. And therefore with good Reason do we say,

say, that that was the First and great Design of his Coming, namely, to restore the Image of God in fallen Mankind.

But for the farther clearing of this Truth, let us, in the Second Place, turn our Thoughts to the State of Mankind, as they are under the Power and Dominion of Sin; and see whether so long as they continue in that State, it be not impossible for them to be happy, though there was no other Punishment to be dreaded from their Sins, but only such as ariseth from the Sins themselves.

Sin is an infinite Imperfection, and therefore an infinite Evil. It is the worst Corruption, and the greatest Debasement of Human Nature that is possible, and the farthest Recession in the World from the Divine Perfections, from their Approach to which all other Perfections have their Name and Estimate.

It is truly ἄνωγειν τὴν ἀσέβειαν, as one of the Philosophers calls it, a perfect lapse into Brutality, a State of flat Contradiction to God.

It is Evil pure and unmixt; no Circumstance in the World can make it in any Sense Good, whereas all other Evils so reputed may be so Circumstantiated, as to have some Mixture of Goodness or Commendableness in them.

It is that which puts Mankind into an utter Incapacity of ever enjoying the Supreme Good, which no other Evil can do. For it is not more impossible (as the Apostle expresth it) for Light to have Communion with Darknes, than for God to have Fellowship with Belial. For though we should suppose a wicked Person, a Whoremonger for Instance, a Worldling, a Malicious, Profane, or Irreligious Person, to have all his Sins forgiven him; and not only so, but to be compassed about, and (as I may say) gilded over with all those external Glories, in which we do believe Good Men shall shine in the Life to come; nay, and farther, to have an excellent Understanding given to him, so as that he was able to reach the Height of Seraphims in his sublime Contemplations: Yet so long as that wicked Nature remains in him, he would not, for all this, be a whit nearer to the enjoying of God; forasmuch as there can be no Enjoyment, where there is no Love, no Likeness of Nature, no Union of Mind. Nay, I know not whether these Circumstances we have placed him in, (supposing such Circumstances compatible to such a Man) would not make him more miserable than otherwise he would be. For the Excellency of his Understanding, and those external Glories, would not suffer him to doubt, but that the greatest Good

was to be had in God: Yet through the perverseness of his Nature he would find, that this Good would be so far from being a Good to him, that it would be the greatest of Evils: Forasmuch as there was the most infinite Unsuitableness and Disagreement between the Object presented to him, and his Faculties, that were to be exercised about it

What shall I say more? As Goodness is Health, so Sin is Sickness and Death: The worst Abuse of our highest Faculties, a State of Violence to Nature. 'Tis all that we call Unreasonableness, Confusion, Deformity, Monstrosity. In a Word, it is the greatest of all Evils, as being at the greatest Distance from the greatest Good.

So that these Things considered, we may reasonably conclude, that if Christ had any Design to make us happy; nay, if he had any Design to make us not miserable; it was necessary for him to redeem us from the Slavery of Sin, and to restore our Natures to their Primitive Rectitude, by making us Vertuous and Good.

How inconsiderate then, how unreasonable are those Men, that would make the ultimate End of our Saviour's Undertaking, to be the freeing Men from the Punishment of their Sin, and the entitling them to eternal Happiness, without any

any respect had to the Change and Renewing of their Natures. For in the First Place, from what hath been said, it is easie to see, how very much they do hereby disparage the Love and Kindness of our Saviour, and lessen his Undertaking. For whilst they make him only to have redeemed us from his Father's Wrath, and the Punishments consequent thereupon, leaving us, in the mean Time, to the Impurity and Corruption of our Natures, which, of it self, without the Accession of any external Evil, is a Misery great enough; they do but make him half a Saviour: One that freed us indeed from some outward Evils, but left us irremediably exposed to many inward ones as great, or greater, than the other. One that delivered us from the Apprehensions of a Gibbet or an Executioner, but could not, or would not cure us of the intolerable Fevers and other Distempers under which we fatally languished.

Secondly, It is easy to see likewise, how absurd a Notion these Men have of Happiness. For whilst they make a Man under the Power and Dominion of Sin, capable of the Happiness of the other World, which chiefly consists in the Fruition of God's Excellencies and Perfections, they do in Effect affirm, that a Man may be made happy by that, of which he hath no Sense, no Perception at all; or rather, to speak properly, by that to which he hath the greatest Aversion and Antipathy. But in true speaking, Heaven to such a Man, (I am sure that Heaven that is promised in the Scripture) would be so far from being a Place of Happiness, that, bating the corporeal Pains, it would, in all Respects, be Hell itself.

Nor will it here help the Matter, to say, that the Righteousness of Christ is imputed to all Believers; and that by Virtue thereof, they are to all Intents and Purposes made Righteous, even as much, as if they were Righteous in their own Persons: I say, this will not help the Matter. For so long as Sin and Wickedness are not mere Names, but real Things, and have their immutable Properties: Let Christ's Righteousness be never so much imputed to us, yet so long as they remain in us, they will be Evils, they will make us Miserable, they will put an eternal Bar to our Enjoyment of God. And we can no more hope to remedy this, by the Imputation of anothers Righteousness, than a Blind Man can hope to see by the Eyes of another; than a Man in the Fit of the Stone or Gout, can hope to find Ease by the Help of his Physician; than a crooked deformed Person can hope to be made Straight and Beautiful by the Comeliness of his Friend.

But

But to come to our Second Head of Discourse. As the destroying the Works of the Devil from among Men, and the making them sincerely Righteous, and Holy, and Good, was a Design most worthy of the Son of God to undertake: So, in the Second Place, his whole Transactions upon Earth, and the Religion he set on Foot in the World, were so contrived in every Part of them, as to be a manifest Pursuance of this Design.

This is the Second Thing I am to speak to; and for the making it Good, there needs no more to be done, than only to desire any Man to cast his Eyes, either on the Precepts which our Lord delivered; or on the Doctrines he taught; or on the Life he lead; or on the Death he suffered; or Lastly, on what he hath been doing for Men at the Right Hand of God ever since: All which taken together, do make up the entire History of our Saviour, and the whole Scheme of his Institution. If now it do appear, that the natural Tendency of every one of these was to make Men Good; and that that was the End they all aimed at; then I hope our Proposition is sufficiently proved.

To go over all these Particulars at this Time, would prove too great an Exercise of your Patience, which I would not willingly injure; and therefore I shall confine my self to the Three First of them, and those too I shall treat of very briefly and generally.

And first of all, that this was the Design of all our Saviour's Precepts, and the Laws that he gave us, is evident beyond Contradiction. There is not one of them which is not either an Injunction of some moral Vertue, or a Prohibition of some Vice, or a Recommendation of the Means by which some Vertue is to be acquired, or some Sin to be mortified.

Whatever other Liberties the Gospel may have indulged unto Men, it is certain it grants none to their Vices. Never was Vertue taught in such Perfection, or exacted with such Severity, as we there find it. Never did any Man set the Duties of Human Life, in all its Relations, towards God, towards our Neighbours, and towards our selves, at so high a Pitch, as our Saviour hath there set them. All the Gentile World cannot shew us, out of all their great Masters of Morality, their most refined Philosophers, such a Collection of sublime and accurate Precepts of Living, as are delivered in one single Sermon of our Saviour's: That, I mean, upon the Mount.

So far is he from giving Countenance to any sort of Wickedness or Impurity in the Practices of Mankind, that he hath forbid all the Tendencies and Approaches to it in the very Thoughts; having put Restraints upon the most secret and undiscernable Workings of our Minds towards every Thing that is Evil. To look upon a Woman to lust after her, is in his Account to commit Adultery. To be rashly and uncharitably angry, is forbid by him as a Degree of Murder. Not to forgive an Injury, is by his Law a Sin, as well as to do one.

I own that there is the greatest Encouragement given by our Saviour to all repenting Sinners that is possible; nay, though they have been the greatest of Sinners. But then he requires both a thorough Change of their Minds, and a thorough Reformation of their Manners too, before they must hope for any Benefit from him.

I own likewise, that there is in the Gospel all the Allowance made for the natural unavoidable Frailties and Weaknesses of Mankind, that can be desired. But then it supposes, the Persons to whom this Allowance is made, to be sincerely (though not perfectly) pure and upright, both in their Minds and Lives; that they harbour no Iniquity in their Hearts, nor practise any known Sin in their Conversation; nay, and that they do their best Endeavours likewise to overcome their very Infirmities.

In a Word, it is the fundamental Law of the Gospel, that without Holiness no Man shall see God; and all the particular Precepts we there meet with, do exactly answer this general one, and are a pursuance of it.

Nor, in the Second Place, is this Design of making Men Vertuous more conspicuous in our Saviour's Precepts, than in the Doctrines he delivered to Mankind. Those Truths (I mean) which he revealed from God to be believed by all those that should Embrace his Religion. There was none of them calculated for the Gratification of Men's idle Curiosities, the buying and amusing them with airy and useles Speculations. Much less were they intended for an Exercise of our Credulity, or a Tryal how far we could bring our Reasons to submit to our Faith. But as on one Hand, they were plain and simple, and such as by their Agreeableness to the rational Faculties of Mankind, did highly recommend themselves to our Belief; so, on the other Hand, they had an immediate Relation to Practice; and were the genuine Principles and Foundations upon which all Human and Divine Virtues were naturally to be superstructed.

The Doctrines which our Saviour delivered, will all of them fall under one of these Three Heads.

They were either in order to the clearing, improving and confirming the great Truths of natural Religion, without which a Vertuous, Holy Life could not be lead.

Or

Or they were in order to the removing of those erroneous wicked Principles out of the Minds of Men, that then commonly prevailed in the World, and were great Hindrances and Obstructions of true Vertue and Piety.

Or lastly, They were such as contained new Arguments, new Encouragements, new Engagements to put us upon the Practice of Holiness, that Mankind never thought of before. And of this last Sort were those Doctrines which we call the peculiar Articles of the Christian Faith; as namely, the infinite Love of God to Mankind, expressed in sending his own Son for their Redemption: That Son of God's offering up of himself as a Sacrifice for the Sins of the World, and thereby Sealing a Covenant of Pardon and Reconciliation to all true Penitents that believe in him: That Son of God's being afterwards raised from the Dead, and carried up into Heaven, to appear there as a perpetual Advocate and Intercessor for us at the Right Hand of God; and at the same Time sending down his Holy Spirit, as his Vicegerent upon Earth, to maintain and promote his Cause and Religion in the World; and by his inward Influences, to assist all Christ's faithful Disciples in their Endeavours after Vertue: And lastly, That Son of God's coming down again from Heaven at the End of the World, to Judge both both

both the Quick and the Dead, according to their Works done in the Flesh; and to Reward all Good Men with Eternal Life and Happiness, and to Punish all bad Men in Hell-fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels.

This now is the Sum of those Doctrines that were delivered by our Saviour; and as to all, and every one of them, I ask, whether they be not truly Practical Doctrines? Whether the whole Scope and Design of them be not to make Men Good? Nay, Lastly, Whether in these Doctrines there be not a more powerful, a more effectual Method laid down for the reforming Human Nature, and obliging the whole World to forsake their Sins, and to lead Holy and Vertuous Lives, than was ever taught before, nay, or than was possible to have been contriv'd by all the Wit of Mankind.

By what I have now said it plainly appears, how groundless the Pretence of those Men is, who would explode the Doctrine of the Blessed Trinity out of the Christian Religion, as being a mere Metaphysical Speculation, and nothing at all tending to the promoting of Piety and Vertue among Men. For as that Doctrine is delivered by our Saviour, it is certainly so far from being a Matter of mere Speculation, that it is the great Founda-

Foundation of, and the greatest Engagement to a Vertuous Holy Life, that was possible to be given. We own it is a Mystery, and a great one but not an useleſs ſpeculative Mystery, but a Mystery of Godlineſs (as the Apoſtle ſtiles it.) God Almighty did not reveal that Mystery to us as a Piece of Philoſophy, for the filling our Heads with new ſublime Notions about his Nature; but as a Principle or Hypotheſis, abſolutely neceſſary for the right underſtanding the Structure and Contrivance of the Goſpel-Dispensation. Wherein diſcovering in how wonderful a manner, each Perſon in the Divine Eſſence, was feverally engaged in the great Affair of bringing Men into Repentance; We might, in the Firſt Place, have abundant Reaſon to embrace and adhere to that Religion, in which alone, of all the Religions in the World, was a Method diſcovered, of reconciling Men to God, without Injury to any of the Divine Attributes, or Violence done to the Liberty of Man's Will: And Secondly, might have the ſtrongeſt Engagements imaginable, ſeriouſly to ſet our ſelves upon the great Work of the Reformation of our Lives; for the effecting of which both Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt had ſo zealouſly, and with ſuch aſtoniſhing Condeſcenſion concerned themſelves.

When

When we therefore consider the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity, as an Article of the Christian Faith; we are not barely to consider it, as it denotes or expresses Three Eternal, Divine Persons subsisting in one Divine Nature; much less are we to trouble our Heads with the Manner of the Emanation of one Person from another, and other such Things, (with their curious Inquiries into, and Definitions about which, some (it is to be feared) instead of clearing, have rather obscured and perplexed that Sacred Mystery: But we are to consider this Mystery, as the Holy Scripture proposeth it; namely, every Person as conversant about, and co-operating in the Work of our Redemption. God the Father, as having an infinite Compassion and Kindness for lost Mankind, and thereupon sending his Son to restore them: God the Son as taking Human Nature upon him, that by his Life he might both Instruct us in God's Will, and be to us an Example of Living; and by his Death, he might make a Propitiation for our Sins: And Lastly, God the Holy Ghost, as sent into the Hearts of all Believers to be a new Principle in them of a Divine Life; to assist all well-disposed Persons with his Grace to the End of the World, in the subduing their Corruptions, and in the Performance of all that Obedience which Christ had required of them. And certainly tainly the Doctrines of the Trinity thus believed, thus considered, is a Foundation of Piety, with a Witness: A Doctrine that carries in it the strongest Arguments that can possibly be made Use of to a reasonable Nature, to oblige us to give up our selves entirely to the Service of God.

But in the Third Place, pass we from the Doctrines our Saviour Taught, to the Life he liv'd in the World; which will afford us another undeniable Proof of the Point we are upon: For whoever considers the Particulars of that Life, as it is Recorded in the Gospels, cannot but be convinced, that it was wholly Framed to the Purposes of teaching Universal Vertue to Mankind, by giving us a most lively and yet a most imitable Example of all the Branches of it.

The Life that our Blessed Lord led upon Earth, was full of Innocence and Simplicity, free from all manner of Guile, and from the least Suspicion of Vice, or any Thing that looked like it. There was nothing in his Temper, or in his Conversation, that favoured of Sourness, or Churlishness; of Vain-glory, or Ambition, or Self-seeking; of the Love of Pleasure, or of the Love of the World. On the contrary, he was the reverse of all these; being the modestest, the humblest, the best-natured, the most self-denying, and disin-disinterested Man that ever appear'd in the World. He had no Views in any of his Actions; but the pure Glory of God, and the Good of Mankind. He was dead to the World while he liv'd in it; very well pleased and contented with his low Condition; extremely devout towards God, and conversing much with him by Prayer and Meditation, and yet making that no Pretence of neglecting the Business of his Calling. He bore Injuries and Affronts with the greatest Meekness, though he was a Person of the highest Quality in the World. Patient he was to Admiration, under unheard of Sufferings, and not only ready to forgive his Enemies, but to oblige them all the Ways they were capable.

It would be endless to pursue all the Instances of that glorious Vertue, in which our Saviour shined forth as a Light to the Paths, and a Lantern to the Feet of all the Ages and Generations of the World. I shall therefore here only desire Leave to take Notice, how exquisitely the Circumstances of our Saviour's Life were contrived, for the rendring him every Way a compleat and proper Example of Vertue to the Sons of Men. And there are Two Particulars especially that make hither.

First, His chusing the Life of a private ordinary Person. Had he appeared in the Quality, and with the Equipage of a Prince, or some such Illustrious Personage (as indeed the Jews expected such a one for their Messias) and framed his Manners and Conversation according to that Character; the Vertues and Graces he must then have chiefly exercised, would not have been imitable by much the greater Part of Mankind; as who, being placed in a quite different Sphere, must also have different Patterns and Precedents to Frame their Lives by; and consequently, the Benefit of his Example would have redounded, comparatively, but to a few. Besides, that State of Life would not have led him to Opportunities of exemplifying several Vertues, which the Generality of Mankind have the most frequent Occasions for; and for the obtaining of which, by reason of their extreme Difficulty, they most stand in need of the Guidance and Encouragement of an Example. Such, for Instance, are, Contentedness in a mean Fortune, a continual Dependance on God's Providence; patient Suffering of Injuries and Persecutions, with several of the like Nature. But now our Saviour appearing as he did, in lowly and common Circumstances, in that Rank and Quality into which the Lot of the greatest Part of Men is cast; and therein continually Conflicting with all those Difficulties and Temptations, to which the Condi-

Condition of Human Life is most exposed; he rendered himself hereby an Example of the most universal Influence, such a Copy of Vertue as the Necessities of Mankind did most require, should be given them to write after.

Again, Secondly, What I have observed as to the outward Condition of our Saviour's Life, the same, and to the same Purposes I observe of his Vertues. They were, indeed, Perfect in the highest Degree; but yet the Instances of them were very ordinary and very familiar, complying with Human Society, and proportioned to the Strength and Capacities of all Men. There was nothing of Prodigy in his Conversation: Nothing that by its Greatness and too much Lustre, might rather dazle our Eyes than guide us, rather scare our Endeavours than encourage them. And herein differs the Story of our Lord, from that of several of his Followers and Disciples in after-Times: Whose Lives, as they are related to us, are rather fit to fright and amaze us, to ensnare and to create Scruples in us; than to conduct us in the Ways of an even and regular Piety. But our Saviour's Life was nothing so. We do not find him forward in those prodigious Mortifications, those long and tedious Abstractions of Spirit, those strange Instances of uncommanded Charity, with which the Legends

Legends of the Saints are stuffed. But in all the Actions in which he did propose himself imitable by us, he did so converse with Men, that Men might with Ease and Pleasure, and without the least Prejudice to their secular Affairs, converse in the World after his Example. In a Word, his whole Life was perfectly framed to a Conformity with his Doctrine, and Articles of Faith. As these were fitted to every Man's Understanding, so was that fitted for every one's Imitation.

Nay, let me add this farther; His very Miracles and inimitable Actions were also Framed as much as was possible for the carrying on this Design. For they were all of such a Quality, that they did not only Evidence the Divine Authority of his Religion to Mens Understandings, which was one great End of them; but did also powerfully recommend Goodness and Charity to their Practices. We might in them, at the same Time, discover both the Truth of Christianity, and the Spirit and Temper of it. For it is observeable of all the great and wonderful Works that our Saviour wrought, that they were not mere Signs and Prodigies, such as the carnal Jews hankered after; but Actions of Beneficence to Mankind; Illustrious Expressions of the most large and diffusive Charity. He never exerted that Divine Power that was in him, but to the Ends of benefiting some Person or other. His constant Course of Miracles, was but a continual going about doing Good.

And herein remarkably appears the Difference between our Saviour's Miracles, and those of Moses and Elias; the one the Author, the other the great Restorer of the Jewish Law. Theirs were for the most Part vindicative and destructive; dreadful Plagues and Judgments upon Gain-sayers; Waters from the Deep to drown them, and Fire from Heaven to consume them; and this suitably enough to the Nature and Genius of that Dispensation, to which they did hereby gain Authority. But our Saviour, who came to infuse another kind of Spirit into Mankind, chose to confirm his Religion by Miracles of Mercy; by healing the Sick, feeding the Hungry, opening the Eyes of the Blind, casting out Devils, and raising dead People to Life again: Plainly hereby making us to understand, that the great Business of his Religion, was to make Men kind and good-natur'd; and to produce in them all the Fruits of an useful and charitable Conversation, and this in a Degree far higher, than either the Law of Moses, or any other Religion in the World did oblige Men to.

And

And thus much for our Saviour's Life and Example, which was the Third Head I was to speak to. As for the Two remaining Parts of his History, which I mentioned, as further Proofs of the Point we are upon; I shall not now meddle with them, having (I fear) been too tedious already. And therefore I only beg Leave to draw Two short Inferences from what hath been said, and I shall conclude.

And First, If this Account we have given of the Ends of Christ's Manifestation in the Flesh be a true one; then we may learn, what Judgment we are to make of all such Doctrines and Opinions, as do either directly teach Vice and Profaneness and careless Living, or by necessary Consequence open a Door to it: Of all such Doctrines as dispose a Man to believe, either that Holiness of Life is not necessary to Salvation; or at least not so necessary, but that there may be ways found out to supply the Want of it: Of all such Doctrines as do check and discourage Men's Endeavours after universal Vertue, either by representing it unto them, as a Thing unattainable in this Life; or by filling their Minds with hard, and unworthy, and penurious Thoughts of God and his Goodness: Of all such Doctrines as tend to extinguish the inward Life and Spirit of Religion, by turning it into Customari-ness, or Formality, or Superstition: In a Word, of all those Doctrines that do any way hinder or obstruct Good Life. For it is certain we may affirm of all such,

that they are not of God; that Christ never taught them; that the Holy Scripture, in the true Sense of it, cannot possibly own them, as being directly contradictory to the great Design and Intend-ment of it, which, as we have seen, is to Plant in Men all manner of Vertue and Holy Conversation.

This is an excellent Rule to examine the Truth of Religious Opinions by; and may be of great Use for the guiding our Judgments as to many Points, which are with great Eagerness Disputed among Christians at this Day. And I mention it, not without a particular Reflection upon many of the Doctrines taught in the Church of Rome; and upon some, likewise, that are too much propagated among our selves, (though, God be thanked, never owned by our Church:) Both of which Sorts, if they be brought to this Test, will appear manifestly False and Unchristian: As being either apparently contrived to serve a secular Turn;
or if not that, yet all of them, directly, or by necessary Consequence, incouraging Men in a careless or a vicious Life.

But

But Secondly, since the End and Design of our Lord's coming into the World, is such as hath been said; then, in the Name of God, let every one that names the Name of Christ, depart from all Iniquity. This is the most natural Inference that can be drawn from this Doctrine.

All of us here present do call our selves Christians; nay, and I believe, would take it ill of any one that should think otherwise of us. For God's Sake then, let us make it appear that we are so, by living up to the Design of our Christianity. Let us shew that we are indeed the Disciples of Christ, by walking as we have him for an Example. Let us make all the World see that we believe his Doctrines, by conforming our selves to his Precepts: That we fear his Threatnings, by flying every Thing that is base and sinful: That we expect his Rewards in the other World, by living above the Vanities of this. Let our constant and vigorous Pursuit of every Thing that is Good, of every Thing that is Just, of every Thing that is Lovely, that is Venerable, that is of good Report, bear Witness for us, to what Master, and to what Religion we do belong.

There is no other Way but this to Evidence, that we are indeed what we pretend to be. It is not sufficient to Entitle us to the Name of Christians, that we were Baptized into Christ, that we profess his Faith, that we rest upon him for Salvation, that we are Members of an Orthodox Church: No, what St. Paul said of Circumcision, the same may be said of Baptism, and all those other Things, (I use the Words of a late Eminent Divine of our Church) “They do verily Profit, if we keep the Law” “of Christ; but if we be Transgressors” “of that Law, our Baptism is no Bap-” “tism; our Faith is mere Infidelity, our” “Christianity is no better than Hea-” “*thenism. A C T S X. 40, 41.

*Him God raised up the Third Day, and shewed him openly,
Not to all the People, but unto Witnesses, chosen before of God, even to us, who did Eat and Drink with him after he rose from the Dead.*

TH E Solemnity of this Day leading me to treat of something relating to our Lord's Resurrection from the Dead; I shall beg Leave at this Time, to give an Account of one Cir-

circumstance of it, which is not commonly insisted on in the Discourses upon this Argument: But which yet is looked upon by some, (who are glad of any Sort of Weapons, though never so slight ones, wherewith they may Attack the Christian Religion) to contain a strong Objection against the Sufficiency of the Proof we have of that great Article of our Faith. It is that which is here told us by St. Peter, in the Words I have now read unto you; namely, that when God raised up our Lord Jesus on the Third Day, and shewed him to be alive, he did not shew him to all the People, but only to chosen Witnesses appointed by God for that Purpose.

It is certain that Christ's Resurrection is the great Fundamental Article of Christianity. Our whole Religion stands or falls with it. If Christ be not Risen, then is our Preaching vain, and your Faith is also vain, as St. Paul tells us. And therefore this Point, above all others, ought to have such a Proof and Attestation as is clear, and full, and convincing, and liable to no Exception or Evasion. Forasmuch as whatever shakes the Credit of this, shakes the Credit of our whole Religion.

Now we Christians do say, and we have the greatest Reason in the World to say it; That we have as good Proof of Christ's Resurrection, as any Man can reason-reasonably desire. We have such an Attestation of it, as none can justly except against. For we have the constant agreeing Testimony of several credible Witnesses, to whom our Saviour shewed himself alive after his Crucifixion; and with whom he did Eat and Drink for several Days together, and in whose Presence he did visibly ascend up into Heaven. And we have that Testimony authentickly conveyed down to us; and confirmed likewise with all the Sorts of Evidence; that any Matter of Fact, done at the same Distance of Time from us, that this was, is capable of.

Well, but to this it is objected, that these Witnesses we speak of, were all of them Christ's Friends, and Followers, and Dependents. There are no Witnesses produced of his Resurrection, but such as were his own Disciples, such as had espoused his Interest, and were of his Party, and consequently were bound, right or wrong, to keep up his Reputation in the World. If Christ did indeed Rise from the Dead, and meant to give sufficient unsuspected Evidence to Mankind of that his Resurrection, it was fit that he should have appeared after his Death to Men of all Sorts, to his Enemies, as well as to his Friends; to those that did not believe his Religion, as well as to those that did. But yet we find that he shewed himself only to his own Followers, and conversed with none but them; not at all with the unbelieving Jews or Romans. And this is owned by the Apostles themselves. St. Peter here in my Text, when he preached Christ's Resurrection to Cornelius, confessing and declaring, that when God raised up Jesus on the Third Day, and shewed him openly, yet it was not to all the People, but to Witnesses chosen before of God, even his own Apostles, who did Eat and Drink with him after he rose from the Dead.

This is, indeed, one of the strongest Objections that is brought against the Article of Christ's Resurrection, and it is not a new one; for Celsus particularly, Fifteen Hundred Years ago, urged it against the Christians, as Origen acquaints us. My Business, at this Time, shall be to consider it, and to give a fair Account of this Matter. And here I have Three or Four Particulars to lay before you, which if they be well considered, will convince any reasonable Man, that how plausibly soever this Objection looks at the first Sight, yet there is nothing in the World in it; but it is all meer Cavil.

I. And First of all, let it be considered, that though it be true what St. Peter here tells us, that when God raised up our Lord from the Dead, he did not shew him to all the People: Yet it is not true, which is supposed in the Objection, that there were no other Witnesses of Christ's Resurrection, but only his own Disciples: For the Soldiers that were placed by the Jewish Magistrates, to guard the Sepulchre after they had Sealed it up, were Witnesses of the whole Transaction, as St. Matthew informs us. It is not indeed said, that they saw our Lord Jesus after he was Risen; but they were sensible of the Earthquake which preceded his Resurrection: And they saw the Angel that came down from Heaven, and rolled away the Stone from the Door of the Sepulchre, and thereupon were struck with such Terror, that they became as dead Men; and they saw likewise, that his Body was missing in the Grave, as appears by the Account they gave of these Things to their Masters, who thereupon bribed them with large Sums of Money to give out that ridiculous Story, that whilst they were asleep, his Disciples came and stole away his Body: As if it was credible, either that Sixty Men that were set to Watch, (for so many they tell us a Roman Custodia consisted of) could all be asleep at once; or if they were, that they could give an Account of what was done while they slept.

But pray what Sort of Man was St. Paul, when our Saviour first appeared to him (for he appeared to him oftner than once) once) in that astonishing Manner that is set down in the Ninth of the Acts, when he, and all his Company, were struck to the Ground by that Glorious unsupported Light that surrounded them: Was he then one of Christ's Followers or Disciples? So far from that, that he breathed forth nothing but Threatnings and Slaughter, against all that were of that Way, and was at that very Time going to Damascus, with a Commission from the Jewish Sanhedrim, to bring bound to Jerusalem, all, both Men and Women, that believed on our Lord Jesus Christ. There were then other Witnesses of our Saviour's Resurrection, besides his own Disciples. That is the First Thing.

II. But Secondly, Though there had been no other Witnesses of Christ's Resurrection than his own Followers; Yet their Testimony was to all Intents and Purposes sufficient to ascertain all reasonable Men to the World's End, of the Truth of the Matter of Fact; nor is there any possible Objection against it: As will appear, if we consider either the Number of the Witnesses; or, the Manner of Christ's Appearance to them; or, the Times of it; or, the Quality of the Persons; or, the no Reason they had to abuse the World with such a Report, if it had been false; or, lastly, the other Evidence, besides their own Word, that they gave of the Truth of it.

For

For their Number, they were many, both Men and Women, even some Hundreds that our Saviour shew'd himself Alive to, after he had been put to Death.

For the Manner of shewing himself to them, it was the most convincing that could be. He did not appear to them one by one, but to Multitudes of them together, even to Five Hundred Brethren at once, as St. Paul tells us, 1 Cor. xv. of whom the greatest Part were alive at the Time when he wrote that Epistle. Nor did he shew himself to his Disciples, by only giving them a Glimpse of him, or just appearing to them, and then vanishing: But he Convers'd with them; he Eat and Drank with them; he expos'd himself to be felt and handled by them.

For the Times, it was not Once or Twice, but frequently, for the Space of Forty Days; at the End of which, he lead them out to the Mount of Olives, and there, in their Presence, did he visibly ascend up into Heaven.

For the Quality of the Witnesses, and the Matter they gave Testimony to; there was no possible Suspicion, either of their being deceived themselves, or deceiving others. The Persons were plain, simple, illiterate Men, and the most unfit in the World for the carrying on such an Imposture, sture, if this had been one. The Matter that they gave Testimony to, was a plain Matter of Fact, obvious to all their Senses; and let them have had never so little Wit, yet if they had but Honesty, their Testimony concerning it, might be relied on. And that they had Honesty, appears beyond all Exception from this; That no Promises or Threatnings could work upon them to depart from their Evidence; but notwithstanding all the Sufferings they underwent upon Account thereof, they continued constant to the Death, in maintaining to all the World, that Jesus was Risen from the Dead.

That they had no Inducement to be thus constant in their Testimony, but the Obligations that their own Consciences laid upon them, is abundantly plain: For what Advantage in the World could they expect to themselves, from their persisting in such a Story as this, if it had been an Untruth? Why nothing but Hatred, and Reproaches, and Infamy and Persecution, and Loss of Goods, and of Life itself. This was all the Reward they were to hope for from the World.

And this Consideration alone, if it be well attended to, will quite take away the Ground of the whole Objection. The main Force of the Objection lies here; That the Witnesses of Christ's Resurrection were his Friends; of his own Party, and consequently were bound to keep up his Reputation among Men, Right or Wrong; and therefore their single Testimony ought not to be relied on. Now it must be confessed, this Circumstance would have occasioned some Suspicion in other Cases, where it was apparent some Worldly Design was carried on; or where there was a Prospect of Riches, or Power; or some other Temporal Advantage to be attained by the Successful Management of an Intrigue: But there is nothing of this to be pretended in this Case of Christ's Witnesses. If Christ did not Rise from the Dead, they had a World of Reasons and Inducements to have deserted both him and his Religion: But they had none to make such a gross Lye for his Sake, how much soever they had been his Friends before. Nay, so far from that, that as I said, it was against all their Worldly Interests to own his Resurrection, though they were never so much convinced that he did really Rise from the Dead. As Things then stood, nothing but a Sense of their Duty could have put them upon it, how well soever he had deserved of them. They must be very good Friends, and very honest and sincere Men too, that will venture all they are worth in this World, and their Lives to boot, for the Sake of their Friend, even while he is alive; and though the Cause
and

Cause they appear in, on his Behalf, be never so just. But is it credible; Nay, is it possible to be conceived, that such a Number of Men should have had such a Kindness for a Friend; a Friend too that was Dead, and from whom they could hope for nothing; nay, a Friend too that had been most unfriendly to them, in having most grossly deluded them: I say, is it possible (as Human Nature is Constituted) that so many Men, for the Sake of such a Person, would forge so monstrous a Lye, as his rising from the Dead, and stand to it too; when they not only got nothing by the Cheat, but exposed themselves thereby to all the Miseries that Mankind can endure?

But, Lastly, The Evidence of Christ's Resurrection did not so much depend upon the bare Testimony of these Witnesses, as upon other Proofs they gave of the Truth of it: For those Men that preached Christ's Resurrection, gave Demonstration of the Truth of the Matter of Fact, by the Works that they themselves wrought.

For here was the Case. Christ, when he departed from his Apostles, to go up into Heaven, told them, that he had appointed them to be his Witnesses, not only in Judea and Samaria, but to the uttermost Parts of the Earth: But they must not enter upon that Office, till they had their

The Eighth Sermon.

Credentials; and therefore he bids them stay at Jerusalem till they were endued with Power from on High. Ten Days after this, the Holy Ghost descends upon them in a visible Manner, and that in a full Assembly. Upon this they every one began to speak in Languages that they never had been Taught, to the great Amazement of vast Numbers of People of several Nations, who, upon the Rumour of this, flock'd thither. Then were they qualified to preach Christ's Resurrection. And they did so: And to confirm the Truth of it, they wrought all Sorts of Miracles. They cur'd all Diseases: Nay, they themselves raised the Dead to Life again. Nay, not only this, but they communicated the same Power of working Miracles to all those they laid their Hands upon. And all these mighty Wonders they solemnly did avow, they perform'd by the Power of Jesus Christ, who was Crucified at Jerusalem, and who was now Alive at the Right Hand of God. What now was the Effect of all this? Why, where-ever they came, they brought over Multitudes, both of Jews and Gentiles, to the Faith of Jesus Christ. One of these Witnesses (St. Peter by Name) by one Sermon, converted Three Thousand. By another Sermon he converted Five Thousand. And within a very few Years, (less than Forty) by the Preaching of these Witnesses, and the mighty mighty Signs and Wonders they wrought, was Christianity spread throughout the World; and continues so to this very Day.

Now can any reasonable Man desire greater Evidence for any Matter of Fact, than all these Particulars I have mentioned will amount to, for the Matter of Fact of our Saviour's Resurrection? Nay, I add farther, was ever any other Matter of Fact in the World better attested than this is?

III. And if this Evidence be sufficient, then all that remains in the Objection will very easily be answered. For, in the Third Place, what is pretended, that Christ ought in Reason to have given Proof of his Resurrection to all about him promiscuously, and not to have confined his Appearance and Conversation to a select Number; is very unreasonable. For, Was this Way of Proceeding necessary for the Convincing the World of the Truth of Christ's Resurrection; or was it not necessary? If it was not necessary, why is it urged? If it was necessary; then that very Thing which the Objection would have Christ to have done, if he had done it, would not have been sufficient, but he must have done more. For by the same Reason or Argument that any Man can prove, that it was necessary for the ascertaining Men of Christ's Resurrection, that he should have appeared to all about him, to all in the City where he rose; by the same Reason it may be proved, that it was necessary he should have appeared to all the Jews in the Land of Canaan; nay, not only so, but to all the Roman Empire: For otherwise they would have had the same Cause of objecting against his Resurrection, that is now brought; namely, that the Thing was a Plot of the Jewish Nation, for the bringing in one of their own Country to be worshipped as a God throughout the World. Nay, further upon this Principle, it would have been necessary for Christ to have shewed himself in Person, not only to all that lived at that Time, but to all of the several succeeding Ages, even to this Day.

The Argument therefore of the Objection proves too much, and therefore it proves nothing at all. The plain Design of it is, to take away the Credit of all such Testimony as is given by a select Number of Witnesses. And if that be once admitted, then the Consequence will be this, That we can have no good Evidence of the Truth of Matter of Fact, but Evidence of Sense. And though we have Christ and his Apostles witnessing to us, and a Thousand Witnesses more, yet with the Rich Man in the Parable, we will not be persuaded, unless one rise from the Dead, and appear to us.

IV. And

IV. And therefore, Fourthly, taking it for granted, that the Witnesses of Christ's Resurrection could but be such a determinate Number of Men; (for otherwise, he must have appeared to all Mankind;) the Question is, What kind of Men Christ should have chosen for this Purpose; his Friends, or his Enemies? The Objection saith, Both; but we say there is no Reason in the World for it. His Enemies having so long been obstinate in their Unbelief, notwithstanding all the Arguments, and all the Miracles he had given them for their Conviction, had render'd themselves utterly unworthy of such a Favour. Ay, but (it will be said) Christ's Appearance from the Dead to them, would have convinced them of their Error. Supposing that; yet still it was not fit that God should convert them after that Manner. According to the Methods in which he deals with Mankind, Faith and Religion is to be a Vertue, a Thing of Choice, and not the Effect of uncontrollable Demonstration. If they had had sufficient Means for the Enlightening their Understandings before, and yet had rejected them, as they did, there was no Reason that they should have new and greater Means used with them; such Means as the Force of which they could not resist. If this was reasonable; then it is reasonable, that every Atheist, or Unbeliever now among us, that is not persuaded by the common standing Arguments of Religion, should expect a Miracle for his Conversion. But this kind of Proceeding is to do a Sort of Violence to Mens Natures, and to take away all the Praise, and all the Reward of being Religious.

But indeed it is not so certain, that those Men that had resisted all Christ's Preaching and Miracles, and had afterwards most inhumanly Crucified him, would have been brought over to the Belief of him, though he had appeared to them from the Dead. On the contrary, those that could impute his Wonderful and Divine Works that he wrought in his Life, to Magick, and Confederacy with the Devil, in all Reason would have given the same Account of this his Appearance after he was Dead. For some Men are so far gone in Vice and Wickedness, that even a Demonstration, or one from the Dead, will not bring them to a Sense of their Errors.

Now, supposing this to be the Case; I am sure such Men as these, were by no Means fit to be put among the Witnesses chosen of God, to whom our Saviour should shew himself Alive after his Death; Because such Witnesses as these would have done his Cause more Hurt, than ever they would have done it Good.

Since

Since therefore there was of Necessity to be a set particular Number of Witnesses for the Attesting our Saviour's Resurrection to the World, it was infinitely fit for the gaining Credit to their Testimony, that great Care should be taken in the Choice of them. And if so; who were fitter to be pitch'd upon for that Employment, than those that were all known, tried, honest Men, and who had attended upon our Lord during all the Time of his Publick Ministry, and so were perfectly well acquainted both with his Life and his Doctrine, as well as with the Truth of his Resurrection? And Lastly, Who would so firmly persist in their Testimony, that they would not scruple to undergo any Sufferings, nay, even Death itself, for so good a Cause. And such a Choice as this our Lord did make; and such a Choice, all Men that consider Things seriously, cannot but allow to be Reasonable.

I cannot think of any Thing that can be further objected upon this Argument, unless it be this: That though it was not fit our Saviour should vouchsafe that Kindness to his Enemies and Crucifiers, as to appear to them; yet, at least, he ought to have chosen some other Witnesses, besides his own Disciples, of his Resurrection; some Persons that were indifferent, that were neither engaged for him, or against him.

Well, Let this be admitted as a reasonable Thing: But in Answer to it, I say, That for any Thing we know to the contrary, Christ did make such a Choice of his Witnesses: For of those Five Hundred Brethren that St. Paul tells us our Saviour appeared to at once, several of them might not be Brethren, might not be Christians before his Appearance to them, but might be converted by that Appearance: So that at the Time of that Appearance, they might be indifferent to him and his Religion, though they were not so afterward.

But whether it were so or no, it matters not: For it will be one and the same Thing as to the Event, and consequently the Objection will be idle and frivolous. For let us put this Question: Would we have had these Indifferent Unconcerned Persons, to whom we wish Christ had appeared after his Resurrection, and appointed them Witnesses of it; I say, would we have had them, after this Appearance, to continue in this Indifferency and Unconcernedness, or would we not? If we would, then we would have them to continue Infidels and Unbelievers, notwithstanding Christ's Resurrection, which they were Eye-Witnesses of. But upon this Supposition, what Service were they like like to do the Christian Cause by their Testimony? This Sort of Persons were like to prove rare Preachers of the Gospel to others, who though they own'd Christ's Resurrection, yet did not believe his Doctrines. But, on the other Side, if we would have all these Indifferent Unconcerned Men, upon the Evidence of Sense that they had of Christ's Resurrection, to be convinced thereby, that he was a true Prophet sent from God, and upon that Conviction to become his Disciples; then the whole Objection we have been so long upon, vanisheth into nothing: For the Thing is admitted that we have been all this while contending for; namely, That every one that was qualified to be a Witness of Christ's Resurrection, must be a Convert to his Religion; and none could do any Service to his Cause, but those that were such. And certainly this is true: And the more you consider it, the more you will be convinced of it. And if you turn over in your Thoughts all the Ways that can be imagined concerning this Business, you will find that the Way that God chose for the Testifying his Son's Resurrection, both to the present Generation, and to future Ages, was the best, was the wisest, was the least exceptionable, was the most effectual for the gaining Credit to it, of any that can be thought of.

And

And thus much let it suffice to have spoken touching my Text, and the Objection that is taken from thence against our Lord's Resurrection. All that I shall do further, is to draw Two or Three Useful Lessons from this great Article of our Faith; for our Instruction, and for our Comfort, and for the awakening us to a Sense of our Duty, and this by Way of Application.

And in the First Place, taking it for granted, that our Saviour's Resurrection is sufficiently and unexceptionably attested, we have hereby the greatest Assurance given to us of the Truth of the Christian Religion, that we can possibly wish or desire: For it is the strongest and most indubitable Seal that God could set to the Verity of all our Saviour's Doctrines. It being utterly impossible, (as being inconsistent with God's Veracity, who cannot set his Seal to a Lye;) that if Jesus had been any other than what he pretended to be, namely, the Son of God, and the Saviour of the World, God would have raised him again to Life, and taken him up into Heaven: Especially, our Saviour having more than once publicly declared before-hand, that after he was put to Death, he would thus rise again; and gave that as a Sign to the Jews, that he was no Impostor, but a true Prophet sent from God.

Secondly,

Secondly, Another Consequence of our Saviour's Resurrection, is, That we have thereby the greatest Demonstration given us of the Certainty of Future Rewards in another World: Which is the great Argument that must prevail upon the Spirits of degenerate Mankind, to pursue the Paths of Vertue and Holiness. For by this Men might be clearly convinced that there was another Life after this, since they had their own Senses to Witness it: He that was once Dead and Buried, now Living again, and visibly Ascending up into Heaven: And the same Person that now liv'd again, had told them before, that all those that believed on him, should be raised up again at the last Day, by that Spirit which raised him. What more could be thought of for the assuring us of a Heavenly Inheritance, if we be good Christians, than this? And what can more powerfully engage us seriously to endeavour to be such, than the Consideration of that Heavenly Inheritance?

But Thirdly and Lastly, Another Effect or Consequence of Christ's Resurrection, is, That thereby God hath declared him to be the Judge both of the Quick and the Dead. This St. Paul tells us, in the xviiith of the Acts; God (saith he) now commandeth all Men every where to repent; because he hath appointed a Day in which he will

will judge the World in Righteousness, by that Man whom he hath ordained; of which he hath given Assurance unto all Men, in that he hath raised him from the Dead. And this is the Point that St. Peter likewise, here in my Text, takes care to inculcate to Cornelius, when he Preached Christ's Resurrection to him. Him (saith he) God raised up the Third Day, and shewed him openly, &c. And he commanded us to Preach to the People, and to Testify that it is He who is Ordained of God to be the Judge of Quick and Dead. And Lastly, This is that which the Angels declared to the Apostles while they were looking stedfastly towards Heaven, as our Saviour Ascended thither: Why stand ye (say they) gazing up into Heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into Heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into Heaven.

O what Confusion will this be to all Unbelievers and impenitent Sinners, when they shall see that very Person whom they thought so meanly of, and whose Offers of Salvation they so often despised, appearing in the Clouds with Ten Thousand Glorious Angels about him, and coming in the most Terrible Manner that can be imagined, to call them to Account for their Lives past, and to execute Judgment upon all Ungodly Men!

They will not then any longer (with the Scoffers that St. Peter tells us shall be in the Last Days) say, Where is the Promise of his coming? for we see that all Things continue as they were from the beginning of the Creation: For they shall be convinced, that however his Coming was for good Reasons deferred, yet he shall then come to purpose; to the everlasting Confusion of their Faces, that opposed, or despised, or neglected Him and his Religion.
in

Then shall they say, Yonder He is whom we slighted, whose Religion we drolled upon, whose Servants and Followers we took to be no better than a Company of credulous Fools. Lo, yonder He is in the Clouds, whose Tenders of Mercy we have refused, whose Counsels we have rejected, to whose Spirit we have done despite, whose Sides we have often pierced by our high Affronts, in as rude a Manner as the Soldiers did at Jerusalem. Yonder He is; but no longer a Carpenter's Son, no longer a Man of Sorrows, and acquainted with Griefs; no longer a mean obscure Galilean; no longer a Crucified God; as we in Derision called him: But the Sovereign of Angels, the Judge of Mankind and Devils, and the Lord of all Things both in Heaven and Earth.

On the other Side, this Reflection, that our Lord by his Resurrection is made the Judge of the World, doth not afford Matter of greater Terror to his Enemies, than it doth of Comfort to his Friends and Followers.

lowers. How must it revive the Heart of every honest Christian, and encourage him to go on patiently and chearfully in the Service of his Master, notwithstanding the many Frailties and Infirmities he groans under; notwithstanding the many Slips and Errors, that after his best Endeavours do attend the Course of his Life; to consider that He who is to take his Accounts at the Last Day, and to pass Sentence upon him, is no other than his Dear Redeemer?

If we look upon the Judgment to come only in this View, that then all the hidden Works of Darknes shall be brought to Light, the Secrets of all Hearts be laid open, the Actions of all Mankind strictly examined and scanned, and Sentence pass upon every one according to his Works done in the Flesh: I say, if we have no other View of the Last Judgment than only this, it would not be very comfortable to the best of us, who are all Sinners, and therefore cannot plead our Innocence at that Great Tribunal. But when we consider further, That it is our Saviour that shall then sit upon the Throne; that it is our Saviour to whom God hath committed the Judging of us: Our Saviour, I say, that knows our Frame, that is sensible of all the Difficulties we have to conflict with, as having himself, in the Days of his Flesh, had sufficient

Expe-

Experience of them (he having been in all Points tempted as we are, only without Sin:) And that this Saviour of ours will not Judge us according to the Rigour of the Law, but according to the Gracious Allowances of the Gospel: The Consideration of this, I say, will prove an effectual Antidote against all the Fears, and Disquietudes, and Despondency we may lie under upon Account of our own Unworthiness.

Let none of us therefore, that heartily own our Lord Jesus, and his Religion, and honestly endeavour to live up to the Laws of his Gospel, fright our selves with such Thoughts as these: How shall I, poor Wretch, dare to appear before the Face of my Judge, at the last Day; who have so many grievous Sins to Answer for? Let us but go on in the good Course we are in, let us but hold the Profession of our Faith without wavering; and daily apply to the Throne of Grace, for Strength and Assistance against our Corruptions; and to our Prayers add our sincere Endeavours to increase in Vertue; and the longer we live, still to grow better: And then I dare say, whatever Sins we may have been guilty of, we shall not need to have any Apprehension or Fear of our Condition, upon Account of them, when we come to dye; but we may with Confidence appear before the Tribunal of our Lord,

Lord, and expect our Part in that Comfortable Sentence which he will at the Last Day pronounce to all his true Disciples and Followers; Come ye Blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you, from the Foundation of the World. To which Kingdom God Almighty bring us all, &c.

A D I S.

CONSCIENCE;

With Respect to those that Separate from the Communion of the Church of England, upon the Pretence of it, &c.

THERE is nothing more in our Mouths than Conscience; and yet there is few Things we have generally taken less Pains to understand. We sit down too often with this, that it is something within us, we do not know what, which we are to Obey in all that it Suggests to us, and we trouble our selves no further about it.

By which Means, it frequently comes to pass; that though we have espoused very dangerous Errors, or happened to be engaged in very Sinful Practices; yet Believing lieving and Acting, as we say, according to our Conscience; we do not only think our selves perfectly Right and Safe, while we continue in this State; but are effectually Armed against all Sorts of Arguments and Endeavours that can be used for the bringing us to a better Mind.

This is too Visible in many Cases; but in none more than in the Case of those that at this Day Separate from the Communion of the Church, as it is Established among us. Though the Laws of the Land, both Ecclesiastical and Civil, do oblige them to join in our Communion; though many Arguments are offer'd to convince them, not only that they Lawfully may, but that they are bound to do it: Though they themselves are sensible, that manifold and grievous Mischiefs and Dangers do ensue from this Breach of Communion, and these unnatural Divisions, both to the Christian Religion in General, and to our Reformed Religion in Particular; yet if to all these Things, a Man can reply, that he is satisfied in his Conscience that he doth well in refusing his Obedience to the Laws; or that he is not satisfied in his Conscience, that he ought to join with us upon such Terms as are required; this single Pretence shall be often thought a sufficient Answer, both to Laws and Arguments.

A strange Thing this is; that Conscience, which among other Ends, was given to Man-

Mankind for a Preservative, and Security of the Publick Peace; for the more effectually obliging Men to Unity, and Obedience to Laws; yet should often be a Means of setting them at Distance, and prove a Shelter for Disobedience and Disorder: That God should command us to obey our Governours in all Lawful Things, for Conscience sake, and yet that we should disobey them in Lawful Things for Conscience sake too.

It is the Design of this Discourse, to examine what there is in this Plea, that is so often made by our Dissenters, for their not complying with the Laws, viz. That it is against their Conscience so to do; and to shew in what Cases this Plea is justly made, and in what Cases not; and where it is justly made, how far it will justify any Man's Separation, and how far it will not. And all this in order to the possessing those who are concerned, with a Sense of the great Necessity that lies upon them, of using their most serious Endeavours to inform their Conscience aright in these Matters, before they presume to think they can seperate from us with a good Conscience, which is all we desire of them; for it is not our Business to persuade any Man to conform against his Conscience, but to convince every Man, how dangerous it may be to follow a misinformed Conscience:

A Discourse of Conscience.

But before I enter upon this Disquisition, it will be necessary, in the First Place, to prepare my Way, by laying down the Grounds and Principles I mean to proceed upon. And here, that I may take in all Things that are needful to be known before-hand, about this Matter, I shall treat distinctly of these Five Heads.

1. Of the Nature of Conscience.
2. Of the Rule of Conscience. And under that,
3. Of the Power of Humane Laws to Oblige the Conscience,
4. And particularly in the Instance of Church Communion.
5. Of the Authority of Conscience: Or how far a Man is obliged to be guided by his Conscience in his Actions.

I. And First, As for the Nature of Conscience, the truest Way to find out that will be, not so much to enquire into the Signification of the Word Conscience, or the several Scholastical Definitions of it; as to consider what every Man doth really mean by that Word, when he has Occasion to make Use of it; for if it do appear that all Men do agree in their Notions and Sense, about this Matter; that without Doubt, which they all thus agree in, is the true Notion and Sense of Conscience.

Now as to this, we may observe in the First Place, that a Man never speaks of his Conscience, but with respect to his own Actions, or to something that hath the Nature of an Action which is done or omitted by him, or is to be done or omitted; Matters of meer Knowledge, and Speculation, we do not concern our Conscience with; as neither with those Things in which we are purely Passive; as neither with Actions, if they be not our own. We do not, for Instance, make it a Point of Conscience, one Way or other, whether a Thing be true or false; or whether this or the other Accident that befalls us, be prosperous or unfortunate; or whether another Man hath done good or bad Actions, in which we are no way concerned. These kind of Things may indeed prove Matters of great Satisfaction or Disquiet; of Joy or Grief to us: But we do not take our Conscience to be affected with them. That Word never comes in, but with respect to something willingly done, or left undone by us; or which we may do, or may forbear.

Secondly, We may observe, that in Common Speech, we do not neither use this Word Conscience about our Actions, but only, so far as those Actions fall under a Moral Consideration; that is, as they have the Nature of Duties or Sins, or as they are Lawful or Unlawful. Always when we speak of Conscience in our Actions, we have Respect to some Law or

A Discourse of Conscience.

Rule, by which those Actions are to be directed and govern'd, and by their Agreeableness or Disagreeableness with which they become morally Good or Evil.

Thirdly, This being so, the only Thing remaining to be enquired into for the finding out what Conscience is, is what can be reasonably thought to be our Sense and Meaning, when we use the Word Conscience, with such Application to our Actions, as we have now said. Now for that I desire it may be considered, that when we talk of our Actions as we concern our Conscience in them, they can but fall under these Two Heads of Distinction; that is to say, in the First Place, we either consider our Actions as already done or omitted: Or we consider them as yet not done, but as we are deliberating about them. And then Secondly, Whether we consider them as done, or not done; as past, or future; yet we Rank them under one of these Three Notions.

We either look upon them as Commanded by God, and so to be Duties; or as Forbidden by God, and so to be Sins; or as neither Commanded nor Forbidden, and so to be indifferent Actions. (With these last Actions, indeed, Conscience is not properly or directly concerned, but only by Accident; to wit, as those indifferent Actions do approach to the Nature of Duties or Sins:) Our Actions, I say, do not touch

our Conscience, but as they fall under some of these Heads.

Now in all these Respects, we have indeed different Ways of bringing in Conscience, but yet, as it will appear, we mean the same Thing by it in them all. First of all, when we are considering an Action as yet not done, if we look upon it as Commanded by God, we say, we are bound in Conscience to do it; if we look upon it as a Sinful Action, we say, it is against our Conscience to do it; if we look upon it as an indifferent Thing, we say, we may do it, or not do it, with a safe Conscience. Now, I pray, what do we mean by these Expressions? I desire that every one would consult his own Mind, and deny, if he can, that this is the Sense of his Words. If he saith he is bound in Conscience to do this or the other Thing, whether he doth not mean this? That he verily thinks it his Duty to do that Action. If he saith that it is against his Conscience to do such an Action, whether he means any more than this? That he is perswaded in his Judgment, that to do such an Action is an Offence against God. If he saith that he can do it with a Safe Conscience; whether he hath any other Meaning than this? That to the best of his Knowledge and Judgment, the Action may be done without Transgressing any Law of God. This is now undeniably, the Sense that every Man in the World hath, when he makes Mention of Conscience as to Actions that are not yet done, but only proposed to his Consideration. So that taking Conscience as it respects our Actions to be done or omitted, and as it is to Govern and Conduct them, (in which Sense we call Conscience a Guide, or a Monitor, and sometimes, though very improperly, a Rule of our Actions,) it can be nothing else, in the Sense of all Men that use that Word, but a Man's Judgment concerning the Goodness or Badness, the Lawfulness or Unlawfulness of Actions, in order to the Conduct of his own Life.

But Secondly, If we speak of our Actions that are done and past, and consider Conscience with reference to them; here, indeed, we do a little vary the Expression about Conscience, but the Notion of it is the same we have now given. As for Instance, when we talk of Peace of Conscience, or Trouble of Conscience, with reference to some Action we have done or omitted; when we say, my Conscience bears me Witness, that I have acted rightly and honestly in this Affair; or my Conscience acquits me from Blame, as to this or the other Action; or I am troubled in Conscience for doing what I have done: If we turn these Phrases into other Words, we shall find that there is nothing more at the bottom of them than this; that reflecting reflecting upon our own Actions, we find, that in this or the other Instance, we have either acted or omitted, as we are convinced in our Judgment we ought to do; and the Remembrance of this is some Pleasure and Satisfaction to us; or we have done or forborn something contrary to what we take to be our Duty, and the Remembrance of this affects us with Grief and Trouble. But still, in both these Instances of Expression, that which we mean by Conscience, is the same Thing as in the former Cases, viz. It is our Judgment and Perswasion concerning what we ought to do, or ought not to do, or lawfully may do; only here we add to it this Consideration, that the Action which we are perswaded to be good, or bad, or indifferent, is now done or omitted by us, and we do remember it. In the former Case, Conscience was considered as the Guide of our Actions; In the latter Case it is considered as the Witness of our Actions: But in both Cases, Conscience is the Judge, and consequently in both Cases the Notion of it is the same, only with this Difference, that in the former it was a Man's Mind, making a Judgment what he ought to do, or not to do; in the latter it is a Man's Mind, reflecting upon what he hath done, or not done, and judging whether he be Innocent or Culpable in the Matter he reflects upon.

I do not know how to give a clearer Account of the Nature of Conscience in general, than this I have now given. This I believe is the Natural Notion that all Men have of it, and there is no Expressions in Scripture about it, but what doth confirm this Notion. If, indeed, we put Epithets to Conscience, and talk of a Good Conscience, or an Evil Conscience; a Tender Conscience, or a Seared Conscience, or the like; then it includes more, both in Scripture, and in common Language, than I have now mentioned. But to give an Account of those Things, I am not now concerned, as being without the Limits of our present Enquiry.

II. And now we are sufficiently prepared for our Second general Point, which is touching the Rule of Conscience; if, indeed, after what we have already said, it be not superfluous to insist upon that.

It appears plainly, by what I have represented, that Conscience must always have a Rule which it is to follow, and by which it is to be govern'd. For since Conscience is nothing else but a Man's Judgment concerning Actions, as good, or bad, or indifferent; it is certain, that a Man must have some Measures to proceed by, in order to the framing such a Judgment about Actions; that is to say, there must be something distinct from the Man himself, that makes Actions to be good, or bad, bad, or indifferent; and from which, by applying particular Actions to it, or comparing them with it, a Man may be able to Judge, whether they be of the one Sort, or the other. Now this, whatever it be, is that which we call the Rule of Conscience; and so much it is its Rule, that Conscience can be no farther a safe Guide, than as it follows that Rule.

If now it be asked, what this Rule of Conscience is; or what that is, which makes a Difference between Actions, as to the Moral Goodness or Badness of them; the Answer to it is obvious to Every-body; that it can be nothing else but the Law of God: For nothing can be a Duty, but what God's Law hath made so; and nothing can be a Sin, but what God's Law hath forbidden; (the very Notion of Sin being, that it is a Transgression of the Law:) And Lastly, we call a Thing Lawful, or Indifferent, upon this very Account, that there is no Law of God, either commanding or forbidding it; and where there is no Law, there is no Transgression. So that undeniably the Great, nay, I say, the only Rule by which Conscience is to be Governed, is the Law of God, considered either as it commands Actions, or forbids them, or as it neither commands them nor forbids them.

But in Order to the giving a more distinct Account of this Rule of Conscience, there there is this needful to be enquired into, viz. In what Sense we take, or what we mean by the Law of God, when we say, it is the Rule of Conscience.

Now to this our Answer is, That by the Law of God, we here understand God's Will, for the Government of Mens Actions, in what Way soever that Will is declared to them.

Now the Will of God is declared to Men Two Ways; either by Nature, or by Revelation; so that the Just, and Adequate Rule of Conscience, is made up of Two Parts, the Law of Nature, and God's Revealed Law.

By the Law of Nature, we mean those Principles of Good and Evil, Just and Unjust, which God hath Stamp'd upon the Minds of all Men, in the very Constitution of their Natures. There are some Things Eternally Good in themselves; such as to Worship God, to Honour our Parents, to stand to our Covenants, to live Peaceably in the Government, from which we receive Protection; and the contrary to these will be Eternally Evil; the Heads of all which Things, thus Good in themselves, are writ so Plainly and Legibly, in the Minds of Mankind, that there is no Man, who is come to the Use of his Reason, but must of Necessity be convinced, that to Practise these Things, will alway be his Duty, and not to Practise etise them, will always be Evil, and a Sin. Now all these Heads and Principles, put together, is that we call the Law of Nature; and this is all the Rule of Conscience that Mankind had, before God was pleased to discover his Will, by more particular Revelation. And this is that Law which the Apostle speaks of, when he saith, that the Gentiles, who had not the Law of Moses, yet had a Law written in their Hearts; by their Acting according to which, or contrary to which, their Conscience did bear Witness to them, and did either Accuse them, or Excuse them.

But then Secondly, to us Christians, God, to this Law of Nature, hath superadded a Revealed Law, which is contained in the Books of Holy Scriptures. Which Revealed Law yet, is not wholly of a different Kind from the former, nor doth it at all void the Obligation of it. But only thus; God hath, in his Revealed Law, declared the Precepts of the Law of Nature, more certainly and accurately than before; He hath given greater Force and Strength to them, than they had before, by the Sanctions of greater Rewards and Punishments: He hath likewise herein perfected the Law of Nature, and hath obliged us, in Point of Duty, to more and higher Instances of Vertue, than Nature did strictly oblige us to: And Lastly, he hath added some positive Laws for us to observe, which were not at all contained in the Law of Nature; as for Instance, to believe in Jesus Christ, in order to Salvation, to make all our Applications to God, in the Name of that Mediator Christ Jesus, to enter into a Christian Society by Baptism, and to Exercise Communion with that Society, by partaking of the Lord's-Supper.

And this is that Law, which we Christians are obliged to, as well as to the Law of our Natures; and which, as it is a Summary of all the Laws of Nature, so, indeed, is it a Summary of all our Duty. So that if any Man will call it the great, or only Rule of Christian Conscience, I shall not much oppose him, provided that this be always remembered, that,

In the Third Place, when we say, That the Natural and Revealed Law of God, is the just Rule by which we are to govern our Conscience; or when we say, that the Law of God, as Revealed and Contained in the Bible, is, to us Christians, the just Rule. We are so to understand this Proposition, as to take into it, not only all that is directly and expressly commanded or forbidden by either of those Laws; but also all that by plain Collection of Right Reason, in applying Generals to Particulars, or comparing one Thing with another, doth appear to be commanded or forbidden by them.

So that by the Law of Nature, as it is a Rule of Conscience, we are not only to understand the prime Heads, and most general Dictates of it, (which are but a few) but also all the necessary Deductions from those Heads. And by the Law of Scripture, as it is the Rule of Conscience, we are not only to understand the express Commands and Prohibitions we meet with there, in the Letter of the Text; but all the Things, likewise, that by unavoidable Consequence, do follow from those Commands, or Prohibitions. In a Word, when we are deliberating with our selves, concerning the Goodness, or Badness, the Lawfulness or Unlawfulness of this, or the other particular Action; we are not only to look upon the Letter of the Law, but to attend further to what that Law may be supposed by a Rational Man to contain in it. And if we be convinced, that the Action we are deliberating about, is commanded or forbidden, by direct Inference, or by Parity of Reason; we ought to look upon it as a Duty, or a Sin, though it be not expressly commanded or forbidden by the Law, in the Letter of it. And if neither by the Letter of the Law, nor by Consequence from it, nor by Parity of Reason, the Action before us appear, either to be commanded or forbidden; in that Case, we are to look upon it as an indifferent Action;

Action, which we may do, or let alone, with a safe Conscience: Or to express the Thing more properly, we are to look upon it as an Action, in which our Conscience is not so much concerned as our Prudence.

III. Having thus given an Account of the Rule of Conscience, that which naturally follows next to be considered, with reference to our present Design, is, What Share Humane Laws have in this Rule of Conscience: Whether they be a Part of this Rule, and do really bind a Man's Conscience to the Observance of them, or no? Which is our Third General Head.

Now as to this, our Answer is, That though the Laws of God be the great, and indeed the only Rule of Conscience, yet the Laws of Men, generally speaking, do also bind the Conscience, and are a Part of its Rule, in a Secondary Sense; that is, by Virtue of, and in Subordination to the Laws of God.

I shall briefly explain the Meaning of this in the Four following Propositions.

First, There is nothing more certain, than that the Law of God, as it is declared, both by Nature and Scripture, doth Command us to obey the Laws of Men.

There is no One Dictate of Nature, more obvious to us, than this, that we are to obey the Government we Live under, in all Honest and Just Things. For this this is, indeed, the principal Law and Foundation of all Society. And it would be impossible, either for Kingdoms, or States, for Cities, or Families, to subsist, or at least to maintain themselves in any tolerable Degree of Peace and Happiness, if this be not acknowledged a Duty.

And then, as for the Laws of God in Scripture, there is nothing more plainly declared there, than that it is God's Will, and our Duty, to obey them that have the Rule over us; and to submit our selves to every Ordinance of Man, for the Lord's Sake, and to be subject, not only for Wrath, but for Conscience Sake. So that no Man can doubt, that he is really bound in Duty to obey the Laws of Men, that are made by Just and Sufficient Authority. And consequently no Man can doubt, that Humane Laws do really bind the Conscience, and are one Part of the Rule by which it is to be Directed and Governed.

But then having said this, we add this farther in the Second Place, That Humane Laws do not bind the Conscience, by any Virtue in themselves, but meerly by Virtue of God's Law, who has Commanded, that we should in all Things, be Subject to our Lawful Governours, not only for Wrath, but for Conscience Sake. Conscience is not properly concerned with any Being in the World, save God alone; it hath no Superiour but him: For the very Notion of it, as I have often said, is no other than our Judgment, of what Things we are bound to do by God's Law, and what Things we are forbidden to do by God's Law.

So that all the Men in the World, cannot bind any Man's Conscience, by Virtue of any Power or Authority that is in them: But now God having made it an Everlasting Law, both by Nature and Scripture, that we should obey those who are set over us, whether they be our Parents, or our Masters; and much more our Princes, and the Sovereign Legislative Power, under whom we Live; by Virtue of this Command of God, and this only, we are for ever bound in Conscience, to Govern our Actions by the Commands that they impose upon us; and those Commands of theirs are a Rule, (tho' a Consequential or a Secondary Rule,) by which we are to govern our Conscience, because they are the Instances of our Obedience to the Laws of God.

But then, in the Third Place, This is also to be remembered; that Humane Laws do no further bind the Conscience, and are a Rule of it, than as they are agreeable to the Laws of God. If any Law, or Command of Man, do clash with any Law of God; that is, if it be either Evil in itself, or Contradictory to the Duty of Christians, as laid down in the Scriptures, in that Case, that Law or Command, by what Humane Authority thority soever it was made or given, doth not bind our Conscience, nor is any Rule of our Actions. On the contrary, we are not, at any Rate, to yield Obedience to it; but we are here reduced to the Apostles Case, and must Act as they did; that is, we must obey God rather than Men, and we Sin if we do not. For since God only hath proper and direct Authority over our Conscience, and Humane Power, only by Delegation from him: And since God hath not given any Commission to the most Sovereign Princes upon Earth to alter his Laws, or to impose any Thing upon his Subjects, that is inconsistent with them: It follows by necessary Consequence, that no Man can be obliged to obey any Laws of Men, farther than they are agreeable to, and consistent with the Laws of God.

There is yet a Fourth Thing necessary to be taken in, for the clearing the Point we are upon, and that is this, That tho' Humane Laws, generally speaking, may be said to bind the Conscience, and to be a Part of its Rule; yet we do not assert that every Humane Law, (though it doth not interfere with any of God's Laws) doth at all Times, and in all Cases, oblige every Man's Conscience to Active Obedience to it; so as that he Sins against God, if he transgress it. No, it would be a very hard Thing to affirm this; and I do not know what Man among us, upon these Terms, would be Innocent.

Thus much I believe we may safely lay down as a Truth; That where either the Matter of the Law is of such a Nature, that the Publick, or some private Person, shall suffer Damage, or Inconvenience, by our not observing it. Or, Secondly, Tho' the Law, as to the Matter of it, be never so trivial; nay, tho' perhaps, all Things considered, it be an inconvenient Law; yet, if the Manner of our not obeying it, be such as gives Offence to our Superiors, or to any others; that is, either argues a Contempt of Authority, or sets an ill Example before our Fellow-Subjects: I say, in either of these Cases, the Transgression of a Humane Law, renders a Man guilty of a Fault, as well as obnoxious to the Penalty of that Law. But out of these Two Cases, I must confess, I do not see how a purely Humane Law doth oblige the Conscience; or how the Transgression of it, doth make a Man guilty of Sin before God. For it is certain, if we secure these Two Points; that is to say, the Good of the Publick, and of private Persons; and with all the Sacredness and Respect which is due to Authority, (which is likewise in Order to the Publick Good:) we Answer all the Ends, for which the Power of making Laws, or laying Commands upon Inferiors, was committed by God to Mankind.

So that though it be true, that Humane Laws do oblige the Conscience, yet it is also also true, that a great many Cases may, and do happen, in which a Man may Act contrary to a purely Humane Law, and yet not be a Sinner before God. Always supposing (as I said,) there be no Contempt or Refractoriness expressed towards the Governors; nor no Scandal, or ill Example given to others by the Action. For if there be either of these in the Case, I dare not acquit the Man from being a Transgressor of God's Law, in the Instance wherein he transgresseth the Laws of Men.

For this is that which we insist upon; that the Authority of our Governors, ought to be held and esteemed very Sacred, both because the Laws of God, and the Publick Good, require it should be so. And therefore, wherever they do peremptorily lay their Commands upon us, we are bound in Conscience so far to comply, as not to contest the Matter with them, nor to seem to do it. And though their Commands, as to the Matter of them, be never so slight; nay, though they should prove feally inconvenient, either to our selves, or the Publick. Yet, if they stand upon them, if they persist in requiring our Obedience to them, we must yield, we must obey; always supposing they be not against God's Laws. For we are at no Hand, either to affront their Authority our selves; or to encourage others, by our Example, to do it. For to do either of these Things, is a greater Evil to the Publick, than our Obedience to an inconvenient Law can easily be.

IV. And now it is Time for us to apply what hath been said in General, concerning the Rule of Conscience, and the Obligation of Humane Laws, to the particular Matter here before us; that is, the Business of Church Communion; the Obligation of Conscience, to which, in such Manner as the Laws have appointed, is the Fourth General Head we are to consider.

This Point of the Obligation to Communion with the Church, as by Law Established, hath been largely handled by several Learned Men of our Church, and particularly it is the Argument of one of those Discourses, which have lately been writ for the sake of our Dissenters. Thither, therefore, I refer the Reader, for full Satisfaction about this Matter, being only just to touch upon it here, as one of the Principles we take for granted, and shall proceed upon in the following Discourse.

And here the Proposition we lay down is this, That it is every Man's Duty, and consequently every Man is bound in Conscience, to join in Communion with that Church, which is Established by Law in the Place where he Lives; so long as that Church is a true, sound Part of the Catholick Church, and there is nothing imposed or required, as a Condition of Communicating with it, that is repugnant to the Laws of God, or the Appointments of Jesus Christ.

This

This Proposition is evident, not only because it necessarily follows from the foregoing Principle; which was, that every Man is bound in Conscience to obey the Laws of Men, that are not contrary to the Laws of God; and therefore, consequently, a Man is bound to obey in Ecclesiastical Matters, as well as Civil; (unless it can be shew'd, that Christ hath forbid all Humane Authority, whether Ecclesiastical or Civil, to make any Laws or Orders about Religion; which I believe never was or can be shew'd:)

But it is evident, upon another Account, which I desire may be considered. We are all really bound, by the Laws of Jesus Christ, and the Nature of his Religion, to preserve, as much as in us lies, the Unity of the Church: Which Unity doth consist, not only in professing the same Faith, but joyning together with our Brethren under Common Governors, in the same Religious Communion of Worship and Sacraments. And therefore, whoever breaks this Unity of the Church, by withdrawing his Obedience from those Church Governors, which God hath set over him in the Place where he Lives; and separating from the Established Religious Assemblies of Christians, under those Governors, doth really transgress the Laws of Jesus Christ, and is guilty of that Sin of Schism, which is so very much cautioned against, and so highly condemned in the Scriptures of the New Testament: Unless, in the mean Time, it doth appear to the Man, who thus withdraws, and separates, that there is something required of him in those Assemblies, and by those Governors, and that as a Term and Condition of holding Communion with them, which he cannot submit to without Sin.

Scrip-

And this Point I do heartily wish was well considered by our Dissenting Brethren. They do seem often to look upon this Business of coming to Church, and joyning with us in Prayers and Sacraments, no otherwise to bind their Conscience, than other purely Humane Laws. They think they owe no Obedience to the Laws in these Matters, different from that which they yield to any common Act of Parliament. And therefore no Wonder they often make so slight a Business of them.

But this is a great Mistake, there is much more in these Things than this comes to. The withdrawing our Communion from the Church, carries a far greater Guilt in it, than the Violating any Law that is purely Humane. For though we do readily grant, that all the Circumstances of Publick Worship enjoyed in the Church; as for Instance, the Times, the Gestures, the Forms of Prayer, the Methods of Reading the Scripture, and Administring the Sacraments; as also, the Habits of the Ministers that are to Officiate, be all of Hu- mane Institution, and may be altered and varied, at the Discretion of our Governors; yet the Publick Worship itself, under Publick Lawful Governors, is of Divine Appointment, and no Man can Renounce it, without Sinning against Jesus Christ, as well, as offending against the Ecclesiastical Laws.

A Humane Law, grounded upon a Divine, or to speak more properly, a Divine Law, Modify'd or Clothed with several Circumstances of Man's Appointment, doth Create another Kind of Obligation upon every Subject, than a Law that is purely Humane; that is to say, a Law, the Matter of which, is neither Good nor Evil in itself, but perfectly indifferent. In the former Case, we must yield Obedience to the Law, as to the Law of God, however it comes Clothed with Circumstances of Man's Appointment. In the other Case, we only yield Obedience, as to the Command of Man; and for no other Reason, than that God, in General, hath obliged us to obey our Superiors.

To make this a little plainer, let us, for Instance, take the Business of Paying Tribute and Custom in this Nation, in which Case there is a Complication of a Divine Law with a Humane, as it is in the Case we are now upon. That every Subject should Pay Tribute, to whom Tribute is due; Custom, to whom Custom is due; is a Law of God, as being a Branch both of Natu-

Natural and Christian Justice: But out of what Goods we should Pay Tribute or Custom, or what Proportion of those Goods should be Paid, this is not defined, either by the Law of Nature, or the Law of the Gospel, but is left to the Determination of the Municipal Laws of every Kingdom. But now, because Humane Authority doth interpose in this Affair, and settles what every Man is to pay to the King, and out of what Commodities; doth it therefore follow, that if a Man can, by Fraud or Concealment, detain the King's Right from him, that he incurs no other Guilt for this, but only the transgressing of an Act of Parliament, and the being Obnoxious to the Penalties, in Case he be detected? No, certainly; for all that the Customs in that Manner and Form, be settled upon the King by Humane Law only, yet the Matter of that Law being a Point of Natural Justice between Man and Man, the Man that is thus Guilty, ought to look upon himself as an Offender against the Divine Law, as an unjust Person before God. And his Willingness to Submit to the Forfeiture of his Goods, will not render him less unjust, or more excusable.

The Case is much the same, as to the Matter we have now before us. It is not a meer Humane Law, or Act of Parliament, that obligeth us to keep the Unity of the Church; to bring our Children to be made Christians by Baptism; to meet together at Solemn Times, for the Profession of our Faith, for the Worshipping God, for the Commemorating the Death of our Saviour, in the Sacrament of his Supper. All this is tied upon us by the Laws of Christ. These Things are as much required of us by God, as Christians; as it is required that we should pay the King, and every Man, what is due to them, if we would not be Dishonest and Unjust. It is true that the particular Forms, and Modes, and Circumstances of doing these Things, are not commanded, nor prescribed by the Laws of Christ, in this Instance of Church Communion, no more than they are prescribed by the Laws of God, in the other Instance I gave: But they are left entirely to the Prudence and Discretion of the Governours that God hath set over us, in Ecclesiastical Matters, just as they are in the other. But, in the mean Time these Things, thus Clothed by Humane Authority, as to their Circumstances; yet being, for the Matter of them, bound upon us by Christ himself, we can no more deny our Obedience to the Publick Laws about them, than we can in the other Instance I have named. And that Man may as well, for Instance, purge himself from the Imputation of Knavery before God, that will contrive a Way of his own, for the paying his just Debts, contrary to what the Law of the Land hath declared to be Just and Honest; as any Man can acquit himself from the Sin of Schism before God, that will chuse a Way of his own for the Publick Worship, different from, and in Opposition to what the Laws of the Church have prescribed; always supposing, that the Worship Established, be commanded by just Authority, and there be nothing required in it, as a Condition of Communion that is against the Laws of Jesus Christ.
be

The Sum of all this is, that it is every Man's Duty, by the Laws of Christ, as well as the Laws of Man, to Worship God in the Way of the Church, so long as there is nothing required in that Worship, that can justly offend the Conscience of a Wise and Good Christian. And therefore, there is more in departing from the Communion of the Church, when we can lawfully hold it, than meerly the Violation of a Statute, or a Humane Law, for we cannot do it without breaking the Law of God. Nay, so much is it against the Law of God to do this, that I think no Authority upon Earth can warrant it. So that even if there was a Law made, which should Ordain, that wilful, causless Separation from the Established Church, should be Allowed and Tolerated, and no Man should be called to an Account for it; yet, nevertheless, such a Separation would still be a Schism, would still be a Sin against God; for for no Human Law can make that Lawful which God's Law hath forbid.

There now only remains our last General Head about Conscience to be spoken to, and then we have done with our Preliminary Points; And that is, concerning the Authority of Conscience, or how far a Man is obliged to follow or be guided by his Conscience in his Actions.

When we speak of the Obligation of Conscience, or of being bound in Conscience to do or not to do an Action; it sufficiently appears from what hath been said, that we can mean no more by these Phrases than this, that we are convinced in our Judgment that it is our Duty to do this or the other Action; because we believe that God hath Commanded it. Or we are perswaded in our Judgment, that we ought to forbear this or the other Action; because we believe that God hath Forbidden it.

This now, being that which we mean by the Obligation of Conscience; here we come to enquire how far this Perswasion or Judgment of Ours, concerning what is our Duty, and what is Sinful, hath Authority over us; how far it doth oblige us to Act or not Act, according to it.

Now in order to the resolving of this, we must take Notice, that our Judgment concerning what God hath Commanded, or Forbidden, or left Indifferent, is either True

True or False. We either make a right Judgment of our Duty, or we make a wrong one. In the former Case, we call our Judgment a Right Conscience; in the latter we call it an Erroneous Conscience. As for those Cases where we Doubt and Hesitate, and know not well how to make any Judgment at all (which is that we call a Doubting Conscience; but, indeed, is properly no Conscience, unless by Accident,) we have nothing here to do with them, but shall reserve them to another Place. Here we suppose, that we do make a Judgment of the Thing; that is, we are perswaded in our Minds, concerning the Goodness or Badness of this, or the other Action: And that which we are to enquire into, is, how far that Judgment binds us to Act according to it.

Now if our Conscience be a Right Conscience; that is, if we have truly informed our Judgment according to the Rule of God's Law; it is beyond all Question, and acknowledged by all the World, that we are in that Case perpetually bound to Act according to our Judgment. It is for ever our Duty so to do; and there can no blame, no guilt fall upon us, for so doing, let the Consequence of our Acting, or not Acting, be what it will. So that as to a Right Conscience, or a well-informed Judgment, there is no Dispute among any Sort of Men.

But

But the great Thing to be enquired into, is, what Obligation a Man is under to Act according to his Judgment, supposing it be False, supposing he hath not rightly informed his Conscience, but hath taken up false Measures of what God hath Commanded, or Forbidden.

Now for the Resolution of this, I lay down these Three Propositions, which I think will take in all that is needful, for the giving Satisfaction to every one, concerning this Point.

First, Where a Man is mistaken in his Judgment, even in that Case it is always a Sin to Act against it. Be our Conscience never so ill instructed, as to what is Good, or Evil, though we should take that for a Duty, which is really a Sin; and on the contrary, that for a Sin which is really a Duty; yet so long as we are thus persuaded, it will be highly Criminal in us, to Act in Contradiction to this Persuasion; and the Reason of this is evident, because, by so doing, we wilfully Act against the best Light, which at present we have, for the direction of our Actions; and consequently our Will is as faulty, and as wicked, in consenting to such Actions, as if we had had truer Notions of Things.

We are to remember, that the Rule of our Duty, whatever it be in itself, cannot touch or affect our Actions, but by the Mediation of our Conscience; that is, no farther than as it is apprehended by us, or as we do understand and remember it. So that when all is done, the immediate Guide of our Actions, can be nothing but our Conscience; our Judgment and Perswasion, concerning the Goodness, or Badness, or Indifferency, of Things.
no

It is true, in all those Instances where we are mistaken, our Conscience proves but a very bad and unsafe Guide; because it hath it self lost its Way, in not following its Rule as it should have done: But, however, our Guide still it is, and we have no other Guide of our Actions but that. And if we may Lawfully refuse to be guided by it in one Instance, we may with as much reason reject its Guidance in all.

What is the Notion that any of us hath of a Wilful Sin, or a Sin against Knowledge, but this? That we have done otherwise than we were convinced to be our Duty, at the same Time that we did so. And what other Measures have we of any Man's Sincerity or Hypocrisy; but only this? That he Acts according to the best of his Judgment, or that he doth not Act according to what he pretends to Believe.

We do not indeed say, that every one is a good Man, that Acts according to his Judgment; or that he is to be commended for all Actions that are done in pursuance of his Perswasion: No, we measure

sure Vertue and Vice by the Rule, according to which a Man ought to Act; as well as by the Man's intention in Acting. But however, we all agree, that that Man is a Knave, that in any Instance Acts contrary to that which he took to be his Duty. And in passing this Sentence we have no regard to this; whether the Man was Right or mistaken in his Judgment; for be his Judgment Right or Wrong, True or False, it is all one as to his Honesty, in Acting or not Acting according to it.

He that hath a false Perswasion of Things, so long as that Perswasion continues, is often as well satisfied that he is in the Right, as if his Perswasion was True. That is, he is oftentimes as confident when he is in an Error, as when he is in the Right. And therefore we cannot but conclude, that he, who being under a mistake will be tempted to Act contrary to his Judgment; would certainly upon the same Temptation Act contrary to it, was his Judgment never so well informed: And therefore, his Will being as bad in the one Case, as in the other, he is Equally a Sinner as to the Wilfulness of the Crime, tho', indeed, in other respects there will be a great difference in the Cases.

This, I believe, is the Sense of all Men in this Matter. If a Man, for Instance, should of a Jew become a Christian, while yet in his Heart he believeth that the Messiah is not yet come, and that our Lord Jesus was an Impostor. Or if a Papist should, to serve some private Ends, Renounce the Communion of the Roman Church and joyn with Ours; while yet he is perswaded that the Roman Church is the only Catholick Church; and that our Reformed Churches are Heretical or Schismatical: Though now there is none of us will deny that the Men in both these Cases have made a good Change; as having changed a False Religion for a True one: Yet for all that, I dare say, we should all agree, they were both of them great Villains and Hypocrites, for making that change, because they made it not upon Honest Principles, and in pursuance of their Judgment, but in direct Contradiction to both. Nay, I dare say, we should all of us think better of an ignorant well-meaning Protestant, that being seduced by the Perswasions and Artifices of a cunning Popish Factor, did really out of Conscience, abandon our Communion, and go over to the Romanists, as thinking theirs to be the safest; I say, we should all of us entertain a more favourable Opinion of such a Man in such a Case, though really here the Change is made from a True Religion to a false one, than we should of either of the other Men I have before named. All this put together is abundantly sufficient to shew, that no Man can in any Case Act against his Judgment ment or Perswasion, but he is Guilty of Sin in so doing.

But then, our Second Proposition is this, The mistake of a Man's Judgment may be of such a Nature, that as it will be a Sin to Act against his Judgment, so it will likewise be a Sin to Act according to it.

For what Authority soever a Man's Conscience has over him, it can never bear him out, if he do an Evil Thing in Compliance with it. My Judgment is (as we have said) the guide of my Actions; but it may through my Negligence be so far misguided itself, as that if I follow it, it will lead me into the most horrid Crimes in the World. And will it be a sufficient Excuse or Justification of my Action in such a Case, to say, that, indeed, herein I did but Act according to my Perswasion? No verily; I may as certainly be damn'd without Repentance, for Acting according to my Judgment, in some Cases, where it is mistaken, as I shall be, for Acting contrary to it in other Cases where it is rightly informed.

And the Reason of this is very plain. It is not my Judgment or Perswasion that makes Good or Evil, Right or Wrong, Justice or Injustice, Vertue or Vice: But it is the Nature of Things themselves; and the Law of God, (and of Men under that) Commanding or Forbidding Things, that makes them so. If the Moral Goodness or Badness of Actions was to be measured by Mens Opinions, and Perswasions; then Good and Evil, Duty and Sin, would be the most various, uncertain Things in the World. They would change their Natures as often as Men change their Opinions; and that which to Day is a Vertue, to Morrow would be a Crime; and that which in one Man, would be a Heroically good Action, would in another Man be a prodigious piece of Villainy; though yet there was no difference in the Action it self, or in the Circumstances of the Man that did it, save only the difference of Opinion.

But such Consequences as these are intolerable, nor indeed do Men either talk or think after this Manner. Every Man when he speaks of Good or Evil, Lawful or Unlawful, means some certain fixed Thing which it is not in his Power to alter the Nature and Property of. That Action is good, and a Duty, which is either so in it self, or made so by some positive Law of God. And that Action, is Evil, and a Sin, that is Forbid by God, in either of these Ways: So that unless it was in our Power to change the Nature of Things, or to alter the Laws of God; it will unavoidably follow, that we shall be for ever Obliged to do some Actions, and to forbear others, whatever our Judgment concerning them is: And consequently we may be Guilty of Sin, if in these Instances we Act contrary to this Obligation;

gation, though, at the same Time, it should happen, that we are firmly perswaded that we ought so to do.

And thus is our Proposition fully proved; but then, for the further clearing of it, I desire it may be taken Notice of, that we do not thus lay it down, that every Mistake of Judgment, about Good or Evil, doth involve a Man in Sin, if he Act according to that Mistake: But only thus, the Mistake of a Man's Judgment may be of such a Nature, that as it will be a Sin in him to Act against it, so it will likewise be Sin to Act according to it. It is not every Error in Morals, that brings a Man under the Necessity of Sinning, if he pursues it in his Actions. A Man's Conscience may mistake its Rule in a Hundred Instances, and yet he may safely enough Act according to it. And the Reason is, because a Man may entertain a great many Mistakes, and false Notions of his Duty, and Act according to them too; and yet, in such Actions, he shall not transgress any Law of God.

Now, this that I say, holds chiefly in these Two Instances. For Example, in the First Place, if a Man believe a Thing to be Commanded by God, which yet indeed is not; but neither is it forbidden: As if a Man should think himself obliged to retire himself from his Business Seven Times, or Three Times a Day, for the Purpose of Devotion; or to give half of his Yearly Income to Pious and Charitable Uses, if he can do it without Prejudice to his Family. Now, in this Case, he is certainly mistaken in his Duty; for the Law of God hath not bound him up to such Measures in either of these Instances: But yet, because God hath not, on the other Hand, laid any Commands upon him to the contrary; it is certain he may, in both these Instances, Act according to this Mistake, without any Guilt in the World: Nay, so long as that Mistake continues, he is bound to Act accordingly.

Again, in the Second Place, if a Man believe a Thing to be forbidden by God's Law, which yet is not, but neither is it Comanded: As for Instance, if a Man think that he ought, by Virtue of a Divine Command, to abstain from all Meats that are strangled, or have Blood in them; or if he believe it unlawful to play at Cards or Dice; or that it is forbidden by God's Word, to let out Money at Interest: Why, in all these Cases, he may follow his Opinion, though it be a false one, without Sin: Nay, he is bound to follow it, because it is the Dictate of his Conscience, however his Conscience be mistaken. And the Reason is plain, because, though he be mistaken in his Judgment about these Matters, yet, since God hath not, by any Law, forbid these Things, there is no Transgression follows upon Acting according to such a Mistake.

But

But then in other Cases, where a Man's Mistake happens to be of such a Nature, as that he cannot Act according to his Conscience, but he transgresseth some Law of God, by which Conscience ought to be Governed: As for Instance, when a Man looks upon that as a lawful Action, or as a Duty, which God hath Forbidden; or looks upon that as a Sin, or at least an indifferent Action, which God hath Commanded; here it is that the Mistake becomes dangerous. And in such Cases the Man is brought into that sad Dilemma we have been representing, viz. That if he Act according to his Perswasion, he transgresseth God's Law, and so is a Sinner upon that Account: If he Acts against his Perswasion, then he is self-condemned, and very guilty before God upon that Account.

Well, but is there no avoiding of this? Must it be laid down as a constant universal Truth, that in all Cases where a Man's Judgment happens to be contrary to the Rule of his Duty, Commanding or Forbidding an Action, he must of Necessity Sin, whether he Act, or not Act, according to that Judgment? If, indeed, he Act against his Conscience, it is readily granted he Sins; but it seems very hard that he should be under a Necessity of Sinning, when he Acts according to it; especially when he is perfectly ignorant of, or mistaken in the Law against which he offends.

This is, indeed, the great Difficulty that occurs in this Matter; and for the untying it, I lay down this Third General Proposition, viz. That the great Thing to be attended to in this Case, of a Man's following a mistaken Judgment, is the Culpableness or Inculpableness, the Faultiness or Innocence of the Mistake upon which he Acts; for according as this is, so will his Guilt in Acting according to it be either greater, or less, or none at all.

We do not say, that a Man is always guilty of a Sin before God, when, upon a Misinformation of Judgment, he omits that which God's Law hath Commanded; or doth that which God's Law hath Forbidden: No, though these Omissions or Actions, may be said to be Sins in themselves; that is, as to the Matter of them, as being Transgressions of God's Law: Yet before we affirm that they will be imputed to a Man as such; that is, prove formally Sins to him; we first consider the Nature of the Action, and the Circumstances of the Man. If we find, upon Examination, that the Instance wherein God's Law is transgressed, is such an Instance, as even an Honest-minded Man may well be supposed to mistake in: And if we find, likewise, that the Man had not sufficient Means for the informing himself aright as to this Matter; and that he hath done all that he could do, in his Circumstances, to understand his Duty: If in such a Case as this, he be mistaken ftaken in his Duty, and Aét upon that Mi-ftake, yet we do not fay, that the Man is properly guilty of any Sin in that Aétion;

however, that Aétion is indeed contrary to the Law of God. On the contrary, we believe him to be innocent as to this Matter; nor will God ever call him to an Account for what he hath done or omitted in theſe Circumftances.

And the Reaſons and Grounds upon which we affirm this, are plain and evident at the firſt Hearing. No Man can be obliged to do more then what is in his Power to do. And whatever a Man is not obliged to do, it is no Sin in him if he do it not: So that if a Man do all that one in his Circumftances can, or ſhould do, for the right underſtanding of his Duty; if he happens to be miſtaken, that mi-ftake cannot be imputed to him as a Sin, because he was not obliged to underſtand better. And if his Miſtake be no Sin, it is certain, to Aét according to that Mi-ftake, can be no Sin neither.

So that the whole Point of Sinning, or not Sinning, in following an Erroneous Con-ſcience, lies here. Whether the Man that is thus miſperſuaded, is to be blamed, or not blamed, for his Miſperſuaſion. If the Error he hath taken up, do not proceed from his own Fault and Negligence, but was the pure unavoidable Effects of the Circumftances in which he is placed;
(which

(which Circumstances, we suppose, he contributed nothing to, but he was put into them by the Disposition of Divine Providence :) Then of what Nature soever the Error be, he doth not contract any Guilt by any Action which he doth in pursuance of that Error: But if it was in his Power to rectify that Error; if he had Means and Opportunities to inform his Conscience better; and the Nature of the Action was such, that it was his Duty so to do; so that he must be accounted guilty of a Gross and Criminal Neglect in not doing it; in this Case the Man is a Transgressor, and accountable unto God, as such, for all the Actions that he doth or omits, contrary to God's Law, while he Acts under that Mistake, or in pursuance of it. And accordingly, as this Neglect or Carelessness is greater or less; so is the Sinfulness of the Action which he doth in pursuance of it, greater or less likewise.

And this is a plain Account of this Matter: So that we see there is no fatal unavoidable Necessity laid upon any Man to commit a Sin, by Acting according to his Conscience. But if at any Time he be brought under those sad Circumstances, he brings that Necessity upon himself: God never put any Man into such a Condition, but that he might do that Duty which was required of him, and be able to give a good Account of his Actions: But here is the Thing;

Thing; Men, by their Vice and Wickedness, by neglecting the Means of Instruction that are afforded them, and not using their Reason and Understanding as they should do, may suffer themselves to be brought under the Bondage of such False and Evil Principles; that they shall, so long as they hold those Principles, fall into Sin, whether they Act according to their Conscience, or Act against it.

I have done with the general Points concerning Conscience, which I thought needful to be premised, as the Grounds and Principles of our following Discourse. I now come to that which I at first proposed, and for the sake of which all this is intended; that is, to speak to the Case of those that Separate from the Communion of the Church of England, upon this Pretence; That it is against their Conscience to join with us in it.

Now all that I conceive needful to be done, in order to a full Discussion of this Case, and giving Satisfaction about it, are these Two Things;

First, To Separate the Pretences of Conscience that are truly and justly made in this Matter, from the false ones: Or, to shew who those are that can rightly plead Conscience for their Nonconformity, and who those are that cannot.

Secondly, To inquire how far this Plea of Conscience, when it is truly made, will justify stify any Dissenter that continues in Separation from the Church, as Established among us; and what is to be done by such a Person, in order to his Acting with a safe and good Conscience in this Affair.

Our First Inquiry is, What is required, in order to any Man's truly pleading Conscience for his refusing to join in Communion with the Established Church? Or, who those Persons are, that can with Justice make that Plea for themselves?

I think it very convenient to begin my Disquisition here, because, by removing all the false Pretences to Conscience, the Controversy will be brought into a much less Compass; and the Difficulties that arise will be more easily untied. The Truth is, if the Thing be examined, I believe it will be found, that the Pretence to Conscience, in the Matter we are talking of, is, as in many other Cases, extended much farther than it ought to be. My Meaning is, that of all those who think fit to withdraw from our Communion, and to live in Disobedience to the known Laws of the Church, and pretend Conscience for so doing, in a great many of them it is not Conscience, but some other Thing mistaken for Conscience, which is the Principle they Act upon. So that if the true Plea of Conscience be separated from those Counterfeit ones, which usually usurp that Name, we shall not find either the Persons to be so many that refuse Communion with us, upon the Account of Conscience truly so called; nor the Cases to be so many in which they do refuse it upon that Account.

Now, in order to the making such a Separation or Distinction between Conscience truly so called, and the several Pretences to it, in this Business of not conforming to the Established Worship, I lay down this general Proposition; that, if the Principles I have laid down about Conscience, be admitted, then it is certainly true, that no Man among us can justly plead Conscience for his Separation from the Church of England; or can say, that it is against his Conscience to joyn in Communion with it; but only such a one as is perswaded in his own Mind, that he cannot Communicate with us, without Sinning against God in so doing.

For since, as we have said, Conscience is nothing else but a Man's Judgment concerning Actions, whether they be Duties or Sins, or Indifferent: And since the Law of God Commanding or Forbidding Actions; or neither Commanding them, nor Forbidding them; is the only Rule by which a Man can judge what Actions are Duties, and what are Sins, and what are Indifferent: It plainly follows, that as a Man cannot be bound in Conscience to do any Action which it doth not appear to him that God's Law hath some Way or other commanded, manded, and made a Duty; so neither can it go against a Man's Conscience, to do any Action which he is not convinced that God's Law hath some Way or other forbidden, and so made a Sin. And therefore, in our present Case; That Man only can justly plead Conscience for his Nonconformity, that can truly say, he is perswaded in his Judgment, that Conformity is forbidden by some Law of God: Or, which is the same Thing, no Man can say, it is against his Conscience to joyn in our Communion, but only such a one as really believes he shall Sin against some Law of God, if he do joyn with us.

If against this it be excepted, that it is very possible for a Man to be well satisfied that there is nothing directly Sinful in our Worship; but yet, for all that, it may be against his Conscience to joyn with us in it: As for Instance, in the Case where a Man takes it really to be his Duty, to hold constant Communion with some other Congregation, where he believes he can be more Edified, or to which he is related by some Church Covenant: To this I Answer, that in this Case, I grant, Conscience is rightly pleaded for Separation, (though how justifiably, I do not now examine:) But then, I say, this Plea proceeds upon the same Grounds I just now laid down. For if the Man (as is supposed in the Case) be convinced, that it is his Duty by God's Law,

(as there is no other Measure of Duty) to hold Communion with others, and not with us; then he must, at the same Time, be convinced, that he cannot, without Transgression of God's Law, (that is, without Sin) joyn with us; and that is the same Account which we give, of its being against any Man's Conscience to hold Communion with us.

Further, If it be urged against our Proposition, that not only in the Case where a Man is perswaded of the Unlawfulness of our Communion, but also in the Case, where he only doubts of the Lawfulness of it, a Man may justly plead Conscience for his Nonconformity, so long as those Doubts remain: And therefore, it is not truly said of us, that in order to the pleading Conscience for Nonconformity, one must be perswaded in his own Mind, that Conformity is forbidden by some Law of God. I Answer, that if the Man who thus doubts of the Lawfulness of Conformity, hath really entertain'd this Principle, that it is a Sin to do any Thing with a doubting Conscience; I grant that it must go against his Conscience to conform, so long as he doubts. But then, this is but the same Thing we are contending for; for therefore it goes against his Conscience to Communicate with us, doubting as he doth, because he believes he shall Sin against God if he should. But if the Man we are speaking of, do not think it it a Breach of God's Law, to Act with a doubting Conscience; then I do not see how it can, in the least, go against his Conscience to Communicate with us upon that Pretence. So that notwithstanding these Two Exceptions; which are all I can think of, it will still remain true, that no Man can justly plead Conscience for his Separation from the Church, but he that is perswaded that he cannot joyn with it, without Sinning against God.

Now, if this Proposition be true, as certainly it is, then how many Mens Pretences to Conscience for their separating from us, are hereby cut off: And, indeed, how few (in Comparison of the Multitude of Dissenters among us) will be left, that can be able with Truth to say, that it is against their Conscience to Communicate with us in our Prayers, and in our Sacraments.

In the First Place, it is evident, That all those who separate from us, upon Account of any private Grudge or Pique, because they have been disobliged, or have received some Disappointment in the Way of our Church, or by the Men that are Favourers of it; and therefore, out of a Pet, will joyn themselves to another Communion; All those that think they can serve their own Turns more effectually, by being of another Way; as for Instance, they can thereby better please a Relation from whom they have Expectances; they can better

advance their Trade, or increase their Fortunes; they can better procure a Reputation, or regain one that is sunk. In a Word, all those that to serve any Ends of Pride, or Interest, or Passion, or out of any other Worldly Consideration, do refuse us their Company in the Worship of God; I say, all such are certainly excluded from pleading Conscience for their Separation.

In the Second Place, all those Lay People, who refuse our Communion, upon Account that the Pastors and Teachers, whom they most Love and Reverence, are not permitted to Exercise their Function among us; whose Pretence it is, that if these good Men were allowed to Teach in our Churches, they would come to our Congregations; but so long as that is refused, they will hear them where they can: I say, all these are likewise excluded from pleading Conscience for their Separation. For, however, it may really and truly be against the Conscience of their Ministers to conform, (there being other Things required of them, than of ordinary People,) yet it is not against their Conscience so to do; for they know no Ill in Conformity, but only that so many good Men are silenced.

In the Third Place, all those that refuse our Communion, upon a meer Dislike of several Things in our Church Offices: They do not, for Instance, like a Form of Prayer in General, and they have several Things to object against our Form in Particular; they do not like our Ceremonies, they do not like the Surplice, or the Cross in Baptism; and fundry other Things they find fault with: Not that they have any Thing to say against the Lawfulness of these Things, but only they have an Aversion to them: All these Men, likewise, are cut off from pleading Conscience for their Separation: For they do not pretend that it is unlawful, or a Sin against God, to joyn with us in our Service, (which is the only Thing wherein their Conscience can be concerned;) but only, they are not pleas'd with many Things in our Service, as fancying them not to be so decent, or convenient, or not to be so prudently order'd as they would have them. But what of all this? Admit the Things to be so as they fancy them; yet still, so long as they do not think there is any Sin in them, it cannot go against their Conscience to joyn with any Assembly in which they are practis'd: Because Conscience, as we have often said, is not touched, is not affected, where no Law of God is transgressed.

In the Fourth Place, all those that are kept from our Communion, purely upon the Account of Education, or Acquaintance with Persons that are of another Perswasion. Those that have nothing to say against our Worship, but only that they were bred in another Way; or those that would joyn

with us in it, but that they know a great many Religious, Godly Persons, that do condemn it, and therefore they dare not come at us: These, now, may be very well-meaning Men, but yet they cannot reasonably plead Conscience, upon this Account, for their Separation. For it is not a Man's Education, or the Example or Opinion of other Men, that makes any Action to be a Duty, or a Sin, but the Law of God commanding or forbidding that Action. And therefore, before I can say that this, or the other Action, is against my Conscience, I must believe that God's Law hath, either in General, or in Particular; either Directly, or by Consequence, made that Action unlawful. I grant, the Opinions of other Men, especially those that are Learned and Pious, are always to be listened to in doubtful Cases. But then, no Man's Opinion can be the Rule of my Conscience; nor am I at all concerned in Conscience to follow it, any farther than I am convinced that it declares God's Law to me. And therefore, sure in this Case of Church Communion, I can be but very little concerned to follow any Man's Opinion; when, both there are so many Persons, and those as Learned and as Pious as any others, that are of another Opinion; and when, also, the Publick Law, which has much more Authority than any private Opinion, hath determined what I am to do in the Case. So that it is great Weakness and Silliness, and not Conscience, that prevails with these Men I am speaking of, to live in Disobedience to the Laws. If, indeed, they be really perswaded in their own Minds, that our Way of Worshipping God, is in any Part or Instance of it, unlawful or forbidden, (let that Perswasion be upon what Grounds it will,) then they may truly say it is against their Conscience to joyn with us: But, if they be not convinced of this, I do not see how the Example, or the Advice of their Friends and Acquaintance, can in the least give them a Title to plead Conscience for their refusing our Communion.

Fifthly, Those that withdraw from the Church upon this Account, that our Governors, in their Laws and Prescriptions about God's Worship, have not rightly used the Power which they are intrusted with, but have exceeded their Bounds; have made, perhaps, too great Encroachments upon Christian Liberty; or laid more Strefs than was meet, upon indifferent Things: These, likewise, are excluded by the former Rule, from pleading Conscience for their Separation. For admit the Lawgivers have been to blame in the Exercise of their Power in these Matters, (which yet is sooner said then proved,) and have really done more than they can answer to God for; yet, what is this to them? The Conscience of the Governors is indeed deeply concerned about

about these Things; and they must give an Account to God for the Abuse of their Authority, if there be any. But how this doth concern the Conscience of the Subject, is not easily understood; so long as what is commanded or enjoined, doth not appear to interfere with any Law of God. But having said this, I fear there is too much Reason to add; that those who so much stand up for Christian Liberty, and would be thought the great Patrons of it; do, by their endless Scruples about indifferent Things, and refusing to obey Authority in such Matters, in all Appearance take the most effectual Course to destroy all Christian Liberty, in the true Notion of it; and to bring in a Religion that shall consist of Touch not, Taste not, Handle not, and such other uncommanded Things.

Sixthly, and Lastly, (to Name no more Instances) All those that can Communicate Occasionally with us, in our Prayers and Sacraments: As for Instance, those that, when they have a Turn to be served; when there is an Office, or some such Thing in the Case; can come to Church, and receive the Communion, but at other Times they do not afford us their Presence: These are also excluded from pretending to Conscience, for their not constantly joyning in Communion with us. For if, indeed, they did believe it was a Sin in them to joyne with us in our Prayers and Sacraments, with what Conscience dare they do it at all? They ought not, for any Worldly Good, to venture upon such an Action as they do believe to be forbidden by God's Law: But if they do not believe, that to joyn in our Communion is a Sinful Thing, (as, I dare say, none of these Persons do) then I will be bold to make the Inference; that it cannot be more against their Conscience to do it Thrice, than to do it Once; and do it constantly, than to do it Thrice.

But let us leave the false Pretenders to Conscience, and come to the Case of those, who can justly plead Conscience for their Separation; or that can truly say, it is against their Conscience to joyn in our Communion.

Of this Sort are all such, and none but such, as do really believe that our Communion is unlawful, or that they cannot Communicate with us without Sin, as I have before proved.

As for those that only doubt of the Lawfulness of our Communion, but are not perswaded that it is unlawful; I do not here consider them, because they cannot say, that it is against their Conscience to Communicate with us, any more than they can say, that they are bound in Conscience to Communicate with us; for they are uncertain as to both these Things, and are not determined either Way. But, however, because

cause these Men may justly plead Conscience upon this Account; that they think it is a Sin to joyn with us, so long as they doubt of the Lawfulness of our Communion: I shall consider their Case afterwards, in a particular Discourse upon that Argument.

Those that I am now concerned with, are such as do believe, or are perswaded, that there is something in our Worship, which they cannot comply with, without Sinning against God.

And my Business is to examine, Whether such a Belief, or Perswasion of the Unlawfulness of our Communion, will justify any Man's Separation from us? Or how far it will do it? And what is to be done by such Persons, in order, either to their Communicating, or not Communicating with us, with a safe Conscience? This is our Second Point, and I apply my self to it.

There are a great many among us, that would, with all their Hearts (as they say) obey the Laws of the Church, and joyn in our Worship and Sacraments; but they are really perswaded that they cannot do it without Sin: For there are some Things required of them, as Conditions of Communicating with us, which are Forbidden by the Laws of God.

As for Instance, It is against the Commands of Christ, to appoint, or to use any Thing in the Worship of God, which God himself hath not appointed. For this is to add to the Word of God, and to Teach for Doctrines, the Commandments and Traditions of Men.

It is against the Commands of Jesus Christ, to stint the Spirit in Prayer, which all those that use a Form of Prayer, must necessarily do.

It is against the Commands of Jesus Christ, to use any Significant Ceremony in Religion: As for Instance, the Cross in Baptism; for that is to make new Sacraments.

It is against the Commands of Jesus Christ, to Kneel at the Lord's Supper; for that is directly to contradict our Saviour's Example, in his Institution of that Sacrament, and favours, besides, of Popish Idolatry.

Since, therefore, there are these Sinful Things in our Worship; and those too, imposed as Terms of Communion; how can we blame them, if they withdraw themselves from us? Would we have them joyn with us in these Practices, which they verily believe to be Sins? Where then was their Conscience? They might, perhaps, by this Means, shew how much they were the Servants of Men: But what would become of their Fidelity to Jesus Christ.

What now shall we say to this? They themselves, are so well satisfied with their own Doings, in these Matters, that they do not think they are in the least to be blamed, for refusing us their Communion, so long as Things stand thus with them. They are sure they herein follow their own Conscience, and therefore they cannot doubt but they are in a safe Condition, and may justify their Proceedings to God, and to all the World, let us say what we please.

This is the Case. Now in Answer to it, we must grant them these Two Things.

First of all, That if, indeed, they be right in their Judgment, and those Things which they except against in our Communion, be really unlawful, and forbidden by Jesus Christ, then they are not at all to be blamed for their not Communicating with us. For in that Case, Separation is not a Sin, but a Duty; we being for ever bound to obey God, rather than Men.

And Secondly, Supposing they be mistaken in their Judgment, and think that to be unlawful, and forbidden by God, which is not really so; yet so long as this Perswasion continues, (though it be a false one) we think they cannot, without Sin, joyn in our Communion. For even an Erroneous Conscience (as we have shewed) binds thus far, that a Man cannot, without Sin, Act in Contradiction to it. These Two Things, I say, we grant them, and let them make the best Advantage of them.

But then this is the Point we stand upon, and which if it be true, will render this whole Plea for Nonconformity upon account

account of Conscience, as I have now opened it, wholly insufficient, viz. If it should prove that our Dissenters are mistaken in their Judgment; and that our Governours do indeed require nothing of them in the matter of Church Communion, but what they may comply with, without breach of God's Law: Then, I say, it will not acquit them from being Guilty of Sin before God in withdrawing from our Communion; to say, that they really believed our Communion to be unlawful; and upon that Account they durst not joyn with us.

It is not my Province here to Answer all their Objections against our Forms of Prayer, our Ceremonies, our Orders and Rules, in Administring Sacraments, and other things that concern our Communion: This hath been done several Times; and of late by several Persons which have treated of all these particular Matters; and who have shewed with great Clearness and Strength, that there is nothing required in our Church Appointments, which is in the least inconsistent with, or Forbidden by any Law of Jesus Christ: But on the contrary, the Establishments of our Church, are for Gravity, Decency, Purity, and agreeableness with the Primitive Christianity; the most approvable, and the least exceptionable of any Church Constitutions at this Day in the World.

These

These Things therefore I meddle not with, but this is the Point I am concerned in: Whether, supposing it be every Man's Duty to joyn in Communion with the Established Church; and there be nothing required in that Communion, but what may be Lawfully Practised? I say, supposing these Two Things; whether it will be sufficient to acquit any Man from Sin, that withdraws from that Communion, upon this Account that through his mistake, he believes he cannot joyn with us without Sin? Or thus, whether will any Man's persuasion that there are Sinful Terms required in our Communion (when yet there are not any) justifie his Separation from us.

This is the General Question truly put; And this I give as the Answer to it: That in general speaking a Man's Erroneous Perswasion doth not dissolve the Obligation of God's Law, or justifie any Man's Transgression of his Duty. So that if God's Law doth Command me to hold Communion with the Church where I have no just Cause to break it: And I have no just Cause to break it in this particular Case, but only I think I have: my Misperswasion in this Matter doth not discharge me from my Obligation to keep the Communion of the Church; or acquit me from Sin before God if I break it.

The Truth and Reason of this I have fully shewed before, in what I have said about the Authority of Conscience. I shall now only by way of further Confirmation ask this Question: Was St. Paul guilty of Sin or no, when he persecuted the Christians; being verily perswaded in his own mind that he ought so to do, and that he Sinned if he did not? If any will say that St. Paul did not Sin in this, because he did but Act according to his Conscience; they contradict his own express Words: For he acknowledgeth himself to be the greatest of Sinners, and that for this very Reason, because he persecuted the Church of Christ. If they say that he did Sin in doing this; then they must at the same Time acknowledge, that a Man's Perswasion that a Thing is a Duty, will not excuse him from Guilt in Practising it; if really and indeed it be against God's Law: And on the other side, by the same Reason, that a Man's Perswasion that a Thing is Unlawful, will not excuse him from Guilt in not practising it; if indeed God's Law hath made it a Duty.

So that it infinitely concerns all our Dissenting Brethren to consider very well what they do, when they withdraw from our Communion. Schism undoubtedly is a great and crying Sin. A Sin, against which, there are as many hard Things said in the Discourses of our Lord and his his Apostles, and in the Writings of the Ancient Christians, as against any other Sin whatsoever. And therefore let those that forsake our Communion; and set up, or joyn with other Assemblies in Opposition to ours; I say, let them look to it, that they be not involved in the Guilt of this dreadful Sin. They must be sure that their Separation proceeds upon good Grounds, if they would free themselves from the imputation of it. It is not always enough to excuse them; that they do believe there are Sinful Conditions imposed in our Communion, and consequently it is their Duty to withdraw. For unless the Thing be so indeed; their believing so will not cancel their Obligation to our Church Communion; or make it cease to be Schism, to withdraw themselves from it.

This may perhaps at the first hearing seem very strange Doctrine to many, but yet it is true for all that; and will appear a little more Evident, if we put the Case in another Instance, wherein we are not so nearly concerned.

Here is one of the Roman-Catholick Perswasion, (as they call it,) that hath been trained up in Popery; and heartily believes it to be the true Religion, and the only One, wherein Salvation is to be had; and therefore in Obedience to the Laws and Customs of that Church, doth pay Religious

Religious Worship to Images; doth Pray to Saints and Angels, doth give Divine Adoration to the Consecrated Bread in the Sacrament; as really believing it to be turned into the Body of Christ, to which his Soul, and Deity, is Personally United.

Is now such a Person as this, guilty of Idolatry in these Practises, or is he not? He doth verily believe that he is not. He would abhor these Practises, if he did in the least believe that God had forbid them, as Idolatrous. Nay, he is so far from believing that they are forbid, that, on the contrary, he hath been taught to believe that they are necessary Duties, and he cannot be a good Catholick, unless he thus Worship Images, and Saints, and the Bread of the Host. Well, now the Point is, Whether such a Man, believing as he doth, be, upon that Account, acquitted from the Sin of Idolatry? We all grant, that if he had such clear Information about these Things, as we Protestants have; he would certainly be an Idolater, if he should continue in these Practises: But whether his Belief, and Opinion, and Perswasion concerning these Things, do not excuse him, and make that cease to be Idolatry, that would otherwise be so; this, I say, is the Question: But yet none of us make any great Question of it. For we do charge the Papists indiscriminately with Idolatry in their Worship, notwithstanding their disclaiming it; notwithstanding their Profession to Worship God, no otherwise than according to his own Will; notwithstanding they do really take themselves obliged in Conscience, to give Divine Worship to the Consecrated Elements, and those other Objects. And we charge them rightly in this. For if it be really Idolatry, by God's Word, to do these Things, then it will be Idolatry in any Man to do them, let his Opinion about them be what it will. A Man's Ignorance, or Mistake, or false Opinion, doth not alter the Nature of Things, it can neither make that cease to be a Duty, which God hath Commanded, nor that cease to be a Sin, which God hath Forbidden. All that it will do, is, that according to the Nature and Circumstances of it, it may more or less extenuate the Transgression that is committed upon the Account thereof.

And the Case is just the same in the Matter before us. For any Man to withdraw his Communion from that Church, with which he ought, and with which he may lawfully Communicate; that is as properly the Sin of Schism, as it is the Sin of Idolatry, to give Divine Worship to that which is not God. For any Man, therefore, to break the Unity of the Church, though it be upon this very Account, that he doth believe it is his Duty so to do; or that he cannot Communicate with that Church without without Sin: Yet, if this Perswasion of his be False, and Erroneous, he is no less a Schismatick for all this, than the other Man is an Idolater, that thinks it is his Duty to adore Images, and those other undue Objects of Divine Worship among the Romanists. It is true, the Man's Ignorance, or Misperwasion, will, according to the greater or less Culpability of it, more or less excuse the Man's Person before God, as it doth in the other Case. But it cannot in the least, make that which God hath made to be Schism, to be no Schism; no more than in the other Case, it makes that to be no Idolatry, which God's Word hath declared to be Idolatry.

Well, now admitting all this; here comes the Pinch of the Thing. It will be said, What, would you have a Man do in this Case? He cannot conform with a safe Conscience, and yet he is a Transgressor if he do not. If he comply against his Conscience, you grant he is guilty of Sin in so doing: If he doth not comply, then you say he is a Schismatick, and so is a Sinner upon that Account. Why, to this I say, that both these Things are often true; and here is that Dilemma, which Men, by suffering their Minds to be abused with Evil Principles and Perswasions, do frequently run themselves into. They are reduced to that Extremity, that they can neither Act, nor forbear Acting; they can can neither Obey, nor Disobey, without Sin.

But what is to be done in this Case? I know nothing but this; that all imaginable Care is to be taken, that the Error and false Principles which misled the Man, be deposed; and that his Judgment be better informed; and then he may both do his Duty, which God's Law requireth of him, and avoid Sinning against his Conscience.

But how is this to be done? Why, no other Way, but by using Conscientiously all those Means which common Prudence will recommend to a Man, for the gaining Instruction and Information to himself, about any Point that he desires thoroughly to understand: That is to say, freeing his Mind from all Pride, and Passion, and Interest, and all other Carnal Prepossessions, and applying himself seriously and impartially to the getting right Notions and Sentiments about his Duty in these Matters: Considering, without Prejudice, what can be said on both Sides: Calling in the best Assistance of the ablest and wisest Men that he can come by: And above all Things, seriously endeavouring to understand the Nature and Spirit of the Christian Religion, and to practise all that he is undoubtedly convinced to be his Duty; and for the Matters in Question, most earnestly imploring the Assistance of God's Spirit to guide and direct him.

Well, but supposing a Man has endeavoured to inform his Judgment as well as he can, and hath used all those Prudent Means that were in his Power, to satisfy himself of the Lawfulness of our Communion, but yet, after all, he is of the same Perswasion that he was, viz. That he cannot joyn in our Worship without Sin; What will we say to such a Man as this? Will we still say, that this Man must either Conform, though against his Conscience, or he is a Schismatick before God? This is the great Difficulty, and I have Two Things to say to it.

In the First Place, We do heartily wish that this was the Case of all, or of the most of our Dissenters, (viz. that they have done what they can to satisfy themselves about our Communion.) For if it was, I do verily perswade my self, that there would presently be an End of all those much-to-be-lamented Schisms and Divisions which do now give so much Scandal to all good Men, and threaten the Ruin of our Reformed Religion; and this poor Church of England, which hath so long laboured and groaned under the furious Attacks that have been made upon her, by Enemies without, and Enemies within her own Bowels, would, in a little time, be perfectly set free from all Apprehension of Danger, at the least, from the one Sort of her Adversaries.

If all our Brethren of the Separation would seriously follow after the Things that make for Peace, and walk by the same Rule, as far as they were able; and in Things where they were otherwise minded, would religiously apply themselves to God for Direction, and to the Use of prudent Means for Satisfaction; I doubt not but the Face of Things would presently be changed among us, and we should hear no more of any Division or Schism in our Nation, that was either dangerous to the Church, or to the Salvation of the Men that were concerned in it.

But alas, we fear we have too great Reason to say, that the Generality of our Dissenting Brethren, even those of them that plead Conscience for their Separation, have not done their Duty in this Matter; have not heartily endeavoured to satisfy their Minds about the Lawfulness of Conformity, in those Points which they stick at.

If they had, one would think, that after all their Endeavours, they should, before they pronounced Conformity to be Unlawful, be able to produce some one plain Text of Scripture for the proving it so, either in the Whole, or in any Part of it. But this they are not able to do. They do, indeed, produce some Texts of Scripture, which they think do make for them; but really they are such, that if they had not supinely taken up their Meaning upon Trust, but would have been at the Pains of carefully examining them, and using such Helps as they have every where at hand for the understanding them; it would have been somewhat difficult for them to have Expounded those Texts in such a Sense as would infer the Unlawfulness of our Communion.

But farther; I say, it is not probable that the Generality of our Dissenters, who condemn our Communion as Unlawful, have ever anxiously applied themselves to the considering the Point, or gaining Satisfaction about it; because they do not seem to have much consulted their own Teachers in this Affair, and much less those of our Way: If they had, they would have been disposed to think better of our Communion, than they do. For, not to mention what the Churchmen do teach and press in this Matter; the most Eminent of their own Ministers are ready, thus far, to give their Testimony to our Communion, That there is nothing required in it, but what a Lay-Person may Honestly and Lawfully comply with, though there may be some Things inconvenient, and which they wish were amended. Nay, they themselves are ready, upon Occasion, to afford us their Company, in all the Instances of Lay-Communion.

But

But I desire not to enlarge upon this Argument, because it is an Invidious one. All that I say, is, That we wish it was not too apparent, by many Evidences, that most of those who separate from us, are so far from having done all they can to bring themselves to a Compliance with our Church Constitutions, that they have done little or nothing at all towards it; but have taken up their Opinions, hand over head, without much Thinking or Enquiring; and having once taken up an Opinion, they adhere to it, without scarce so much as once thinking that it is possible for them to be in the Wrong.

If you speak of a Man, that may with reason be said to have done his Endeavour to satisfy himself about the Points of his Duty in this Matter: Give us such a one as hath no End, no Interest to serve, by his Religion, but only to please God, and to go to Heaven; and who, in the Choice of the Way that leads thither, hath the Indifference of a Traveller; to whom it is all one, whether his Way light on the Right Hand, or the Left, being only concerned that it be the Way which leads to his Journey's End.

Give us a Man, that concerns himself as little as you please in the Speculative Disputes and Controversies of Religion, but yet is wonderfully solicitous about the Practice of his Duty, and therefore will reuse no Pains or Trouble that may give him a right Understanding of that.

Give us a Man, that in the midst of the great Heats and Divisions, and different Communions of the Church, is yet modest, and humble, and docible; that believes he may be mistaken, and that his private Friends may be mistaken too; and hath such an Esteem and Reverence for the Wisdom of his Governors in Church or State, as to admit, that it is probable they may see farther into Matters of State, and Religion, than he doth: And that therefore every Tenet and Opinion that was imbibed in his Education, that was infused by private Men of his Acquaintance, or that was espoused upon a very few Thoughts, and little Consideration, ought not to be so stiffly maintained, as to Controul, or to be set in Opposition to the Publick Establishments of Authority.

Lastly: Give us a Man, that where the Publick Laws do run counter to his Private Sentiments, and he is at a loss to reconcile his Duty to Men, with his Duty to God; yet doth not presently, upon this, set up a Flag of Defiance to Authority; but rather applies himself, with all the Indifference and Honesty he can, to get a true Information of these Matters: And to that End, he prays to God continually for his Assistance; he calls in the best Helps, and consults the best Guides he can; his Ears are open to what both Sides can say for themselves; and he is as willing to read a Book which is writ against his Opinion, as one that defends it: In a Word, if he be Prejudiced, or Biass'd any Way, it is on the Side of Authority; being rather desirous to find himself mistaken, and his Governors in the right, than himself in the right, and his Governors mistaken. I say, shew us such a Man as this, and we readily grant you have produced a Person that doth sincerely use his Endeavours to satisfy himself about the Lawfulness of our Communion. But then we must say this also, That as the Case stands between the Church of England and the Dissenters, we can hardly believe that such a Man will long continue in Separation from the Church; but will, in a little time, gain the Satisfaction of seeing, not only that he may Lawfully joyn with us, but also, that it is his Duty so to do.

But let us admit, that a Man may have endeavoured to inform his Judgment as well as he can, and yet be so far from being convinced that it is his Duty to joyn with us in our Worship, that he is still of Opinion it is his Duty to separate from us: What will we say of such a Man? Will we still brand him for a Schismatick, notwithstanding he hath done all he can to bring himself over to us, but cannot?

To this I Answer, in the Second Place, according to the Principles I have before laid down, That if such a Case do ever happen; though the Man cannot be excused from Schism, as to the Matter of it, (because where-ever there is an Actual Separation from a Church, with which we ought, and with which we may, Lawfully Communicate; there is an Actual Schism commenced, let the Pretence for the Separation be what it will :) yet I trust, he shall not be charged before God with the Formal Guilt of the Schism, any farther than the Error that led him into it was contracted by his own fault.

Though Schism in itself (as we have said) be a great Sin; yet we do not say, that all those who are engaged in the same Schism, are equally Guilty before God.

In the First place, Those that separate from the Church, to serve any private secular Turn, these are most horribly guilty of Schism, and there is nothing to be said in their Excuse.

In the Second place, Those who separate from the Church, through Misperfwasions, and Mistakes of Judgment, which they groundlessly and foolishly took up, and might have avoided, and would yet still certainly correct in themselves, if they were but so Careful and Conscientious about their Duty as they ought to be: These Men have, indeed, far more to say for them-themselves than the former; but yet they are very blameable, and are bound, as they love their Souls, to take more Care of informing their Conscience aright, that so they may leave that Sin they are engaged in.

But Thirdly, Those that separate from the Church of God, because they know no better, nor never had Means to know better; or those that have sincerely endeavoured to understand their Duty, as much as could be expected from one in their Circumstances; yet, through weakness of Understanding, or want of Opportunity, light into wrong Paths: In a Word, those that are unhappily engaged in a Schism, but God Almighty, who searcheth the Hearts, knoweth that it is not through the Fault of their Wills, but the Misfortune of their Circumstances: I say, if there be any Man among us that is in this Condition, though he be a Schismatick Materially, yet he is Innocently, at least Pitiably, so: And if he be as free from Blame in the other Parts of his Life, he may be a good Christian for all that. And God Almighty, we hope, who judgeth of Men by their inward Sincerity, and not by their outward Circumstances, will impute that Schism, (which in others, perhaps, is a wilful Crime) to this Man, no otherwise than as a pure Sin of Ignorance, which shall not (upon a general Repentance for all Sins, Sins, known and unknown) be accounted for at the Last Day. Especially, if this Innocently-mistaken Man we speak of, do, to the other Regularities of his Life, add a diligent Care in these Four following Points.

First, That he be not Obstinate, and Per-tinacious in his Way; but that he keep his Mind readily prepared and disposed to receive any Conviction, which God, by any Means or Instruments, shall offer to him.

Secondly, That he separate no farther from the Church, of which he ought to be a Member, than he needs must; but do chearfully comply with the Publick Laws and Establishments, in all those Instances where he is satisfied he may do it with a safe Conscience.

Thirdly, That where he cannot give Active Obedience to the Laws, he do, in those Instances, Patiently and Christianly submit to the Penalties which those Laws inflict; neither exclaiming against his Governours, or the Magistrates, as Persecutors, for Enacting or Executing those Laws; nor using any undue, illegal Means, to get himself more Ease and Liberty; but in all Things behaving himself as a quiet and peaceable Subject to the Government he lives under.

And Fourthly, and Lastly, That he shew himself a good Neighbour, as well as a good Subject,

Subject, in avoiding all peevish and bitter Censures of those that differ in Opinion and Perswasion from him; and exercising Humanity, and Friendliness, and Charity to all his Fellow-Christians.

Whosoever, I say, of our Brethren of the Separation, make good these points: That is to say, are, in the First place, very sincere in their Endeavours to inform their Conscience aright in the Matter of our Communion: And, in the next place, when they cannot satisfy their Conscience about our Way, do yet, in their Dissent from us, observe the Four Particulars I have now named: I should be loth, for my part, to Censure them either as ill Men, or ill Subjects, or ill Christians.

But then, all that I have said in this Matter, doth no more justify the Sin of Schism, or extenuate the Hainousness of it in its own Nature, than it would serve to justify or extenuate the Sin of Idolatry, if all that I have now said, was applied to the Case of an Ignorant, Well-meaning, Devout Papist. For I do verily believe, that what I have now represented, by way of Apology, for an innocent, mistaken Separatist, will hold true, mutatis mutandis, in the Case of a deluded Romanist, who is invincibly, and without any Fault of his, intangled in the Practice of their Idolatries. But I believe, for all that, the Sin of Idolatry is in itself a most grievous Sin, and [so I be-

I believe is the Sin of Schism; and therefore, notwithstanding all that may be said, concerning the Innocence or Excuseableness of some Mens Mistakes about these Matters; yet nevertheless, it infinitely concerns every Person to have a Care how he be engaged either in the one or the other.

To come to a Conclusion: That which I would most seriously press, from what hath been said, is this; It appears from the foregoing Discourse, how absolutely necessary it is, that every Man should endeavour to inform his Judgment aright, in the Matters that offend his Conscience, before he withdraw his Obedience from his Lawful Governors, and his Communion from those that Worship God in Publick under them. It appears likewise, that it is not enough to justify a Man's Separation, that this or the other Thing in our Worship is really against his Conscience; for he may be a great Sinner, notwithstanding that, for leaving our Assemblies, if it should prove at last that he is mistaken in his Notions.

What therefore should every Dissenter among us do, that hath any Regard to his Duty, and would preserve a good Conscience? I say, What is there that more concerns him to do, than presently to set about the true informing of his Judgment in the Points where he is now dissatisfy'd, for fear he be found to live in a grievous Sin, all the Time he separates from us.

And therefore, let no Man that lives out of our Communion satisfy himself with such frivolous Pretences as these: That as for all the Substantials of Religion, the Matters of Faith and Good Life, they do agree with us; and that as for the other Matters which concern Ceremonies and Discipline, these are nice, controverted Points, Points disputed pro and con. amongst the Divines; and therefore why should they trouble their Heads about them; nay, perhaps, if they should, they have neither Abilities nor Opportunities to understand them.

It must be confessed, that something of this is true; but yet it is nothing to their Purpose. It is very well that we all agree in the Rule of Faith and Manners; and it would be happy if all the Christian World did so too: But still, Schism is a dreadful Sin; and a Man may as certainly, without Repentance, be Damned for that, as for being an Heretick in his Opinion, or a Drunkard, for Instance, in his Manners. Sure I am, the Ancient Christian Fathers thought so.

It is true, likewise, that the Business of Church Government and Discipline, and other Points of Ecclesiastical Conformity, is a Matter of Dispute and Controversy among us: But who is it that made it so? The Church of England, without doubt, would have been very well pleased, if there had been no Dust raised, no Dispute or Contentions moved in these Matters, but that every Member would have done his Duty peaceably and quietly in his Station: Or, that if any Controversy had arose, it should have been debated among Learned Men, and never have proceeded to Separation from the Communion.

We do not pretend to lay any Strefs upon Skill and Knowledge about these Matters, in order to a Man's Salvation. We believe and teach, that a Man may be a very good Christian, and go to Heaven, that never understood how to justify the Cross in Baptism, or to defend the Common-Prayer-Book against all the Exceptions that are made against it. All that we say, is, that if any Man will scruple and except against the Use of these Things, it lies upon him, nay, he is bound, as he would keep a good Conscience, to use the best Means he possibly can, to get Satisfaction about them: Or if he do not, at his own Peril be it; nay, even at the Peril of his Salvation, if he breaks the Churches Peace and Communion upon that Account.

And as for those that pretend that these are Subtile Points, and above their Reach and Capacity, and they have not Understanding and Wit enough to dive into them: Why, in God's Name, who desires them? We say, that they might innocently enough,

enough, and with a good Conscience, comply with their Governors in these Points, as they do in a Hundred others, without ever diving into them. But since, it seems, they have Wit and Understanding enough to Cavil and find Fault with these Things, and upon that Account to deny their Obedience to those Lawful Powers which God hath set over them: One would think they should, at the same time, have so much Honesty, as seriously to endeavour to give themselves Satisfaction as to those Things they find Fault with; and this is all we desire of them; and it is for their own Sakes too, as well as ours, that we desire it. For otherwise they will never be able to Answer, either to God or Man, for the horrible Inconveniencies and Mischiefs that arise to the Church of Christ, by the Division and Separation which they are engaged in.

To conclude: If in any Instance, that famous Precept of the Apostle, of proving all Things, and holding fast that which is Good, do oblige Christians, it doth especially in this. If ever it be a Man's Duty to satisfy himself about the Goodness and Lawfulness of a Thing that he is apt to doubt of, it is certainly in the Case where his Superiors have laid their Commands upon him; for there he cannot disobey without Sin, unless he can assure himself that he hath done all that he can to reconcile their

their Commands with his Duty to God; but upon the best Means he hath used, he finds them Irreconcilable. For a Man to disobey, till he has done this, is an unwarrantable Thing; and, in the Case that I now speak of, it is no less than the Sin of Formal Criminal Schism.

Doubting Conscience.

I Have in a former Discourse spoken to the Case of those Dissenters, who Separate from the Established Church for this Reason, That they are Perswaded that they cannot Lawfully join in our Communion. I now come to speak to the Case of those who Separate from us for a less Reason, viz. Because they Doubt whether they may Lawfully Communicate with us or no; and so long as they thus Doubt, they dare not come near us, because they fear they should Sin against God, if they should do any Action with a Doubting Conscience.

To this indeed a short Answer might be given from the former Discourse, and that is this, That let the Obligation of a Doubting Conscience be as great as we can reasonably suppose it, yet if Communion with our Church, as it is Established, be really a Duty, then a Man's Doubts concerning the Lawfulness of it, will not make it cease to be so, or justify his Separation from it. For if a Man's settled Perswasion, that an Action is unlawful, will not ordinarily acquit him from Sin, if he omit that Action, supposing God's Law hath Commanded it (as I there shew'd;) much less will a Man's bare Doubt concerning the Lawfulness of an Action, justify his Omission of it in such a Case.

But because this Answer seems rather to cut the Knot, than to untie it; it is my Meaning, in the following Discourse, particularly to examine, and discuss this Plea of a Doubting Conscience, and to shew what little force there is in it, to keep any Man from Conformity, that would otherwise Conform. Hoping that some Reader, whose Case this is, may, by what he here finds offer'd toward his Satisfaction, either be prevail'd with to lay aside his Doubts in the Matter of our Communion, or at least be convinced, that it is more reasonable and safe to Communicate with us, Doubting as he doth, than to continue in Separation from us.

In handling this Case of a Doubting Conscience, I shall observe the same Method I did in the former Discourse, because indeed I cannot think of a better;

That

That is, I shall endeavour to give an Account of these Four Things:

- I. Of the Nature of a Doubting Conscience, and how it is distinguished from the other Kinds of Conscience.
- II. Of the Rule of a Doubting Conscience, or what Measures a Man is to proceed by, for the determining himself in a doubtful Case.
- III. Of the Power that Humane Laws, Ecclesiastical or Civil; have, to Over-rule a Man's Doubts in any Matter.
- IV. Of the Authority of a Doubting Conscience, i. e. Whether at all, or how far a Man is Obliged by it.

These Four Heads do, I think, take in all the Difficulties that are in the Case of a Doubting Conscience:

I. I begin with the first Head, The Nature of a Doubting Conscience. In speaking to which, I shall Treat of these Three Things. 1. Of Doubting in General. 2. Of such Doubts as do affect or concern a Man's Conscience: 3. Of the Difference between the Doubting Conscience, and the Scrupulous:

i. As To the first of these, which is concerning the Nature of Doubting in General; we may take Notice, That a Man is properly said to doubt, when he cannot give his Assent to either part of a Contradiction; that is; cannot make a Judgment whether the Thing he is considering, be so, or be not so; but through the equal, or at least fair probability that is on both sides of the Question, continues irresolute and undetermined; now, perhaps, he thinks this side the more probable, and by and by the other, but he is uncertain as to both, and cannot fix upon either.

So that a Doubting Mind is not more usually, than properly, resembled to a Balance, which, by reason of the equal Weight which is put into both Scales, is not cast on either side, but hangs in the same Posture, or waves up and down, without either Scale coming to the bottom.

Nevertheless, in a Doubtful Case, a Man may lean more to one side of the Question than the other, and yet continue Doubtful still. Just as there may be so much more Weight put into one Scale than the other, as will be sufficient to incline the Balance more to that side; while yet that Weight is not so considerable as to be able perfectly to turn it, so as to carry down the Scale to the usual mark of Down-weight, and there to settle it.

There is indeed this difference between these Two Things, that a Balance through the exact equality of the Weights put into each Scale, may be so poised,

as to hang perfectly in equilibrio, without inclination either way, and continue so to do: But it will be difficult, if not impossible, to put a Case or a Question, where a Man's Mind, after all Things considered, is so perfectly indifferent to both sides of it, as not to be more inclined to chuse one, than the other.

When once there appears so much more Evidence on one side of the doubtful Case, that the Mind is enabled to determine itself, and to give a settled assent on that side, then the Man ceaseth to doubt any longer; for that which was a Doubt before, is now turned into a Per-swasion. And if it be a Case wherein Conscience is concern'd, that which was before a Doubting Conscience, is now changed into a Resolved Conscience. Here, to resume our former Comparison, the Balance no longer hangs in equilibrio, or moves unsettledly this way or that way, but is plainly turned and fixed on one side.

It is true, in this Case a Man doth not always determine himself with the same degree of Perswasion, or Satisfaction to his own Mind. Sometimes the Evidence is so strong, as to Command an entire Assent of his Understanding; an Assent so full, that it hath not the least mixture of Doubtfulness in it; and this we call an Assurance, or a full Perswasion. At other times the Evidence may be of force enough to gain an Assent, but yet not so strong an Assent as to exclude all Doubt of the contrary; and this kind of Assent we call an Opinion, or a probable Perswasion. And something like this we may observe in the Ballance: The Scale that preponderates, is not always carried down with the same Force and Briskness; but according as the Weight that turns the Balance is greater or less, so, in proportion, it may plainly be discern'd that the Scale descends either more strongly and nimbly, or more weakly and slowly. But still in both these Cases, the Man hath formed a Judgment of the Point; the Balance is turned, and where-ever this happens, there is an end of the Doubt or Æquilibrium; and consequently, if it be in a Case that concerns a Man's Conscience, it ceases to be any longer a Doubting Conscience, and becomes resolved and determin'd, though perhaps not fully satisfied and free from all kind of Doubt and Scruple about that thing.

2. And thus much of Doubting in General. I now come to consider it with respect to Conscience, i. e. to enquire how far, or in what Cases a Man's Conscience is affected with his Doubts? Which is our Second Point under this Head.

There are a Thousand Cases in which a Man may be doubtful, as to which his Conscience

Conscience shall be no way concerned. A Man's Doubts may indeed be as various as are the Objects he hath to consider, and to make a judgment of; and therefore unless we will say, that every thing that a Man thinks of, or saith, or doth, affects his Conscience, we must not say that every Doubt doth.

As a Man's Conscience is not touched or affected with any thing but his own Actions; so neither do a Man's Doubts affect or touch his Conscience, any farther than they concern his Actions. So that Doubts about Matters of meer Speculation, (as whether such a Proposition be true or false,) and likewise Doubts about Matter of Fact, (as, whether such a thing was done or not done,) which do not relate to the Government of a Man's own Actions, these Doubts do not concern his Conscience.

As a Man's Conscience is not affected with his own Actions, under any other Notion, or Consideration, than only as God's Law is to regulate them, viz. as they are either commanded by that Law, or forbidden by it: so neither do a Man's Doubts concerning his Actions, affect his Conscience any farther, or upon any other account, than only as God's Law may be transgressed by doing or not doing the Action he doubts of; that is, as he may Sin against God, either by omitting the Action, when God's Law hath commanded it, or by doing it, when God's Law hath forbidden it.

So that in all doubtful Cases, where a Man apprehends no danger of transgressing God's Law, whether he doth the Action he doubts about, or doth it not, there his Conscience is not properly concerned.

And this is so true, that though we should suppose one side of the Action in question to be really, all Things considered, more expedient and more eligible than the other, yet so long as we are satisfied that we may, without breach of God's Law, chuse either side, we are not concern'd in Conscience to chuse that side which is the most expedient, or the most eligible. For the truth of this, besides the reason of the Thing, we have the Authority of St. Paul, who when this Case was proposed to him, Whether it was better for the Christians in those Times to Marry, or not to Marry? He thus resolves it, That though indeed, as Things then stood, it was better not to Marry, yet they might do what they would; for if they did Marry, they sinned not: And though (as he saith) he that gave not his Virgin in Marriage did better than he that gave her in Marriage; yet he allows, that he that gave her in Marriage did well, and consequently did act with a good Conscience. Vid. 1 Cor. 7.

3. From what hath been said, we may be able to give a clear Account of the Nature of a Doubting Conscience, and to distinguish it from the other sorts of Conscience; particularly that which they call the Scrupulous, which is our Third Point under this Head.

Conscience is usually, though how properly I will not now dispute, distributed into these Three Kinds, the Resolved, the Scrupulous, and the Doubting.

When we speak of a Resolved Conscience, every body knows that we mean no more by that Phrase than this, that a Man is satisfied and resolved in his own Mind, concerning the action he hath been deliberating upon, viz. that he is bound to do it, as being a Duty; or that he is bound to forbear it, as being a Sin; or, that he may either do it, or forbear it, as being an indifferent Action, neither commanded, nor Forbidden by God. Now this Perswasion, if it be according to the Rule of the Divine Law, we call it a Right Conscience: If it be contrary to that Rule, we call it an Erroneous Conscience. But of this we need speak no more here, since it was the whole Argument of the former Discourse.

As for the Scrupulous Conscience, as that is made a distinct sort of Conscience from the Resolved and the Doubting, we may thus define it: It is a Conscience in some measure measure resolved, but yet accompanied with a Fear of acting according to that Resolution. It is the unhappiness of a great many, that when they are pretty well satisfied in their Judgment concerning this or the other Point, which they made a Matter of Conscience, and have nothing considerable to object against the Evidence that is given them, but, on the contrary, are convinced that they ought, or that they may lawfully act thus or thus; yet for all that, when they come to act, they are very uneasy, and make a World of Difficulties. Not that there is any new Reason appears that can pretend to unsettle, much less overthrow the Grounds of their first Determination; but only their unaccountable Fears must pass for Reasons. This now is to have a Scrupulous Conscience in the proper Sense.

But a Doubting Conscience, (which is that we are now concerned in) though in Common Speech it be often confounded with the Scrupulous, is quite different from both these sorts of Conscience. For in both those, a Man is supposed to have passed a Judgment in his Mind, whether the Action before him be according to God's Law, or against it. But in the Case of a Doubting Conscience, it appears, from what I have said, that a Man hath not, nor cannot, so long as he Doubts, make any Judgment at all, but is uncertain as to both sides; having, as he thinks, as many Arguments to incline him one way, as the other; and when once he comes to have so much Evidence as to create a Perswasion or Opinion on one side, then he ceaseth to have a Doubting Conscience.

So that the True Definition of a Doubting Conscience, as it is commonly called, is this: The Suspence of a Man's Judgment in a Question about the Duty or the Sin of an Action, occasioned by the Equal (or near Equal) Probabilities on both sides.

And likewise, the true Difference between a Doubting, a Resolved, and a Scrupulous Conscience, is this; That the Resolved Conscience is satisfied about its Point, and acts confidently, at least cheerfully: The Scrupulous Conscience is likewise satisfied in the general, but either dares not act, or acts fearfully. The Doubting Conscience is not satisfied at all; for the Point before it is still a Question, of which it can make no Judgment, no Resolution, because of the equal appearances of Reason on both sides.

This is a plain Account of the Doubting Conscience. But after all, it must be acknowledged, that this which we call a Doubting Conscience, and which we have been all this while Discourfing of, is, truly and strictly speaking, so far from being any particular sort or kind of Conscience, as we have hitherto supposed it, that it is no Conscience at all.

Conscience, as we have often said, is a Man's Mind, making a Judgment about the Morality of his Actions; but that which we are now talking of, is a Man's Mind making no Judgment as to that Point, but continuing wavering, and undetermined. Now, how a Man's Judgment, and his no Judgment, which are the Contradictories to one another, should agree in the same common Nature of Conscience, is not easy to be understood. The Truth is, by the same Logick or Propriety of Speech, that we say a Doubting Conscience, we may also, if we please, say an Unresolved Resolution, or a Perswasion, without an Assent. But, however, because Use hath given the Name of Conscience to the Doubting Mind, and because Conscience is sometimes really concerned about Acting in Doubtful Cases, I chuse to follow the common Way of Speaking.

II. I now proceed to our Second General Head, which is concerning the Rule of a Doubting Conscience.

In speaking to this, I shall do these Two Things; viz. I shall shew,

First, What Kind of Rule we here speak of; that is, which Conscience needs in a Doubtful Case.

Secondly, What that Rule is, or wherein it doth consist.

1. As to the First of these. When we speak of the Rule of a Doubting Conscience, we do not mean such a Rule by which a Man shall be enabled to resolve all his Doubts concerning every Point, so as that he shall cease to doubt any longer concerning that Point: But we mean only such a Rule, by which a Man may be directed how to determine himself in every Doubtful Case, so as to Act with a safe Conscience; whether he can get rid of his Doubts or not.

There is just as much Difference between these Two Things, as there is between Doubting, for Instance, whether a Thing in General, be Lawful, or not Lawful; and Doubting what I am to do in a particular Case, where I doubt of the Lawfulness of the Thing. The First of which Doubts, the Casuists call a Speculative Doubt; the other a Practical.

It is plain, that a Man may often very easily come to a Resolution of this latter kind of Doubt; that is, be very well satisfied what it becomes him to do, as to this present Action, without being able to resolve his Doubt of the former kind.

Thus, for Instance, a Man may not be able to resolve this Question, Whether it be Lawful, or not Lawful, to play at Cards or Dice? Which is the Speculative Doubt, as the Schools call it: But he may be very able to resolve this Question, What is most reasonable for him to do, in the Case of such a Doubt? Again, a Man may not be able to resolve this Doubt, Whether the present War, in which his Prince is engaged, be a just War or no? But yet he may be very well able to satisfy himself as to the Practical Doubt; that is, what is his Duty to do, in Case his Prince command him to serve in that War, concerning which he doth thus doubt?

Now, it is the Doubts of this latter kind, these Practical Doubts, as they are call'd, that Conscience is directly and immediately concerned with; and consequently, for the resolving of which, it chiefly needs a Rule to direct it. For if a Man can but get satisfied what is most agreeable to his Duty to do, as to the present Action he doubts about, it is no great matter, as to his Conscience, whether he can get his General or Speculative Doubts about that Action, resolved, or no. These kind of Doubts, if they cannot be Resolved, must be Overruled.

The Truth is, it is a very idle thing, for Men to Talk, that a Man must do no Action, till all his Doubts about it be resolved. Thus far, we grant, it concerns him, that his Doubts should be resolved, viz. That he should be satisfied in his own Mind, that that side of the Action he determines himself to, is, all things considered, the more fit and reasonable to be chosen:

chosen : And to direct a Man in making such a Choice, is our principal Business under this Head. But if it be meant, that a Man must so resolve all his Doubts about an Action, as to see clearly through all the Speculative Points which occasion his Doubts, so as to be able to untie all the Difficulties which before entangled his Understanding, and from intrinsic Arguments, drawn from the Nature of the Thing, to pronounce concerning the Merits of the Question; I say, if this be their Meaning, there is nothing more absurd than to say, That a Man is not to do an Action, till he has resolved or deposed all his Doubts about it.

For in many Cases this is utterly impossible to be done; the Person concerned, perhaps, having no sufficient Means for the obtaining such a Resolution of his Doubts as we spoke of; or if he had, the Case may be such, as will not allow him sufficient Time of Consideration for the doing it, for he must either Act or not Act presently; and he is in equal Perplexity, both as to the one, and as to the other. What now, in such a Case, can a Man possibly do, more than this? viz. by his own Reason, and the Advice of his Friends, to get satisfied what is most reasonable, and most agreeable to his Duty, for him to do in the present Circumstances, and to proceed accordingly; for as for other kind of Reso-

Resolution of his Doubts, as things stand with him, he hath not the least Prospect of it.

And, indeed, when all is said, we see, de facto, that this is the usual Way of proceeding among Men, even those that are very Honest and Conscientious. I dare say, if we take all the Doubtful Cases that happen, where there is one Case in which a Man proceeds to Action, upon such a Resolution of his Doubts as we before spoke of, there are ten Cases where the Doubt is Over-ruled, and the Man proceeds to Action without such a Resolution, sitting down satisfied with this, that though he cannot Answer the Difficulties on both sides, yet, all things considered, it is most reasonable for him, in the present Circumstances, to Act thus, rather than otherwise; for this he takes to be most agreeable to his General Duty; or this is that which Wise and Good Men, whom he hath consulted, do advise him to.

And now, having sufficiently explained what kind of Resolution of Doubts that is which a Man's Conscience stands in need of, in order to his Acting safely in a doubtful Case,

II. I come to the Second Question upon this Head, which is, What that Rule is, by which we are to proceed, in thus resolving our Doubts, or determining
our

our selves to one Side or other, in any Doubtful Case that happens to us.

In Answer to this Enquiry, I shall do these Two Things. First, I shall give some Account of the General Rule by which a Doubting Conscience is to be guided. Secondly, I shall apply this General Rule to the several Heads of Doubtful Cases, wherein a Man's Conscience may be concerned; that so every one may be furnished with some Principles, for the determining himself in any Matter, concerning which he happens to have a Doubt.

1. As to the First of these, Whoever hath considered what we have before said, will easily be perswaded; that nothing ought to turn the Ballance, in a Doubtful Case, but the greater Weight of Reason on one Side than the other. For since the very Notion of Doubting, is the Suspence of a Man's Judgment in a Question; upon Account of the equal Appearances of Reason on both Sides of it; it is plain, that that which is to settle the Judgment, and to determine the Doubt, can be nothing else but this; viz. That, after all Things considered, there doth appear greater Reason to lie on this Side of the Question, than there doth on that. So that the General Rule of a Doubting Conscience, and from which the Measures of resolving all particular Cases, are to be taken, cannot be laid down otherwise than thus; viz. That in all Doubtful

A Discourse concerning

Cases, that Side which, all Things duly considered, doth appear more reasonable, that is to be chosen.

I am not ignorant that the Casuists have usually proposed this Rule in other Terms, viz. That in all Doubtful Cases, the safer Side is to be followed. But I do purposely avoid the expressing it so, because of the uncertain Meaning of the safer Side? For according as that Word is Expounded, (as it may be Expounded different Ways,) so is the Rule so Worded, true or false.

If we take Safety in the strict and proper Sense, and as it is, indeed, usually understood, viz. as it is opposed to any Hazard or Danger: It is so far from being an Adequate Rule of a Doubting Conscience, in all Cases, to follow the safer Side, that in many Cases it will be very unadvisable so to do.

Sure I am, that in Doubtful Cases, which concern the Civil Life, no Wise Man doth always make this a Rule to himself. We see a Hundred Instances every Day, where Men venture upon the less safe, and the more hazardous Side, upon the Account of other Reasons and Considerations, which they think ought more to prevail with them.

It is certainly, in general Speaking, more safe, (that is, more free from Hazard or Danger) to Travel on Foot, than on Horseback; to stay at Home, than to go into Foreign Countries; to Traffick by Land, than to venture one's Stock on the uncertain Seas. But yet, for all this, the Consideration of the Ease and Expedition that is to be had in the First Case, and the Improvement and Benefit that is to be hoped for in the Second, and the Gain and Profit in the last, do we see every Day over-balance the Consideration of Safety in these Cases, and determine a Man not to that Side which is freest from Danger, but to that which is more Convenient, or more Useful, or more Advantageous.

And thus it is likewise, as to those Doubtful Cases, wherein a Man's Conscience is concerned. I suppose, that when we speak of the safer Side of any Action, with Reference to Conscience, we generally mean that Side on which there appears the least Hazard or Danger of transgressing any Law of God. But now, in this Sense of Safety, I do not think that it is always a good Rule, for a Doubting Conscience, to chuse the safer Side: On the contrary, I think, that if the Rule be thus put, and thus understood, it will often prove a Snare to a Man's Mind, and rather entangle him further in Difficulties, than help him out of them.

If it was receiv'd as a Rule, That a Man is, in all his Actions, to keep himself at the greatest Distance he can, from the Danger of Sinning, (which is the Notion of Safety I here speak of) I dare say, there are very few Persons that converse much in the World, but have Reason, almost every Day, to call themselves to Account for transgressing this Rule. For they do every Day ingage in such Actions, in which they cannot but acknowledge, that they do expose themselves to a greater Danger of Sinning than if they had not ingaged in them.

Thus, for Instance, what Man is there among us, who, although he know himself to be prone enough to the Sin of Intemperance, in Eating or Drinking, when Temptations are offered; and accordingly, for this Reason, doth most seriously set himself against this particular Sin; yet makes any great Scruple of going to Feasts and Entertainments, when he is invited by others; nay, or of making them himself, when Decency or Civility, or the serving any of his Temporal Affairs, doth require him so to do? But yet it is certain, that by thus doing, he runs a much greater Hazard of falling into the Sin he fears, than if he should forbear all such Occasions or Temptations of Intemperance.

Many other Instances, which Daily occur in Humane Life, might be given, wherein Good Men, nay, even the best of Men, do, for the Sake of their Business, or other laudable Designs, which they think fit to pursue, frequently venture to expose themselves to such Dangers of Sinning ning, as they might have avoided; and this without any Reproach from their own Conscience, or any Censure from other Men.

The Truth is, God hath no where commanded us to avoid all possible Danger of Sinning, but only to avoid all Sin when we are in Danger. It is enough for the securing a Man's Duty, that he doth not transgress the Laws of God in any Action that he takes in Hand: But it is not required that he should, in every Instance of his Conversation, preserve himself from the utmost Possibility, or (if you will) Danger of so doing. For, upon this Supposition, it would be impossible for one to live like a Man of this World, and perform the common Offices of Civil Life, and much more to live to any great Purposes for the serving his Generation. Indeed, the Result of all would be, that whoever would approve himself to be truly Religious and Conscientious, must abandon all Secular Affairs, and retire to a Cloyster or a Desert.

But it may be said, What is this to our Business? Those we now spoke of, are supposed to be fully satisfied in their own Minds, that they may safely venture on the more dangerous Side of an Action, for the Sake of some considerable Good that they design in that Action: But the Case we are now concerned in, is that of one who is altogether Doubtful whether he may Lawfully do the Action or no. To this I Answer, That my Business is now to give an Account of the Rule by which Men are to proceed, in determining themselves in Doubtful Cases; and that which I have said, doth thus far, I think, come Home to that Business, that if it be allowed that it is adviseable in any Case, to forsake the more safe Side of an Action, and to chuse the more hazardous; we will take it for granted, That it may be as adviseable in a Doubtful Case, as in any other, until it be made to appear, that God hath appointed a Rule for Doubting Persons to govern themselves by, different from that he hath given to other Men: Or, to speak the Thing more plainly, till it be made to appear, that those who are so unhappy as to Doubt, are debarred of the Priviledge of Acting according to the best of their Reason and Discretion, which Men that do not Doubt are allowed to do.

But to come more strictly to the Point. I do believe there do abundance of Doubtful Cases, properly so called, frequently happen, in which no Man of Understanding, although we suppose him never so Honest, doth think he is obliged to determine himself to that Side of the Action on which he apprehends there is least Danger of Sinning: But on the contrary, he will often forsake that Side which is safer, in this Sense, for that which doth more recommend commend it self to him upon other Accounts.

Thus, for Instance, some times Doubtful Cases do happen, in which the greater Probability on one Side, will turn the Balance against the greater Safety on the other. Thus, if a Man should Doubt whether it may be Lawful to Eat any Thing Sirangled, or that hath Blood in it, (because there are some Passages in the Scripture, that seem to forbid these Meats;) and should repair to some intelligent Person about this Matter, who should give him such an Account of those Texts, and of all the other Difficulties in this Affair, that the Man comes away satisfied, that it is far more probable that all Kinds of Meats are allowed by the Christian Religion, than that any are forbidden.

I ask now, Whether this Degree of Satisfaction have not Weight enough to put an End to a Man's Doubt in such a Case as this, so as that he may, with a quiet Conscience, Eat of these Meats as there is Occasion? I believe most Men will be of this Opinion; but yet, the Doubt here is not determined on the safer Side, but on the more unsafe. For it is certain, a Man is in less Danger of Sinning, if he wholly forbear these Meats, than if, for the serving a present Convenience, he do eat of them. And the Reason is plain; because there are fair Grounds from the Scripture, and Antiquity, for making it a Question, whether these Meats be Lawful or no; and it is really yet a Question among many, and it was lately so to the Man himself: But no Man in the World ever made a Question, whether these Meats might not at any time be Lawfully forbidden, there being no Law of God pretended, that obliges a Man to Eat of them.

Again, As the greater Probability will turn the Ballance against the safer Side of a Doubt; so oftentimes such Doubtful Cases do happen, in which, when the Probabilities are equal on both Sides, the Consideration of the greater Temporal Advantages on the one Side, will have Weight enough with a very Honest Man, to overbalance the Consideration of the greater Safety on the other. [Still taking Safety in the Sense we before gave.]

Thus, for Instance, Suppose one should demand of another Man a Sum of Money which he pretends to be due to him; and the Man of whom it is demanded, after the strictest and most conscientious Enquiry he can make, is not satisfied in his own Mind that it is due. But such is the Confidence of the Demander, and such Appearances of Reason he offers, that the Man comes to doubt equally, whether it be due or no; so that there are here equal Probabilities on both Sides. The Thing in Question now is, Whether it be advisable wisable in point of Conscience, for the Man to pay the Money demanded, till he have better Evidence of the Justice of the Demands?

If a Man be to follow the safer Side, it is certain he must pay it. For it is undeniably more safe, that is, farther removed from the Danger of Sin, to satisfy the Demands, though it be to his own Loss. For by this Means he perfectly sets himself free from the Apprehensions even of the Possibility of wronging his Neighbour, which is the Sin that he fears in this Case: Whereas if he do not pay the Money, he is uncertain whether he detains the Man's Right from him or no.

But then, on the other Hand, if he should pay the Money when it is no Way due, (as he hath as much Reason to believe that it is not due, as that it is,) how shall he Answer to his Wife and Children, for parting with such a Sum, which, as his Circumstances may be, he cannot spare without great Prejudice to them?

This is the Case, and these are the Arguments that are to be urged on both Sides of it; and I leave it to any considering Man to judge which ought to prevail. I am pretty confident, that most Men will thus determine, viz. That since in this Case it is as probable, that the Demands aforesaid are Unjust, as that they are Just; and since no Man is obliged to depart from that he is possessed of, till it do appear by good Evidence, that it is due to another Man: And since, withal, it is unreasonable so to do, when it will be to the Prejudice of a Man's Self and his Family: These Things being so, it will be more advisable for the Man, in this Case, to keep his Money, till it be either by Law adjudged, or he have more convincing Proofs to his own Conscience, that he ought to pay it.

I think I need not use either more Instances, or more Words, to shew that it is not always a Rule to a Doubting Conscience, to chuse the safer Side of the Doubt, taking the safer Side for that which is at the greatest Distance from the Danger of Sinning: It being abundantly plain, that many Doubtful Cases may, and do happen, in which, though one Side may appear farther removed from the Danger of transgressing God's Law; yet while it doth not appear that the other Side is unlawful, and withal it is evident, that upon other Accounts that Side is more eligible to a Prudent Person, no Good Man (if he be but as Wise as he is Good) will make any Difficulty of waveing the safer Side for the more Prudent, and that without thinking himself ever the less Conscientious for so doing.

But after all this, If on the other Hand, any Man have another Notion of Safety, than that we have now been speaking of; that that is to say, will enlarge the Signification of the Word, and will call by the Name of the safer Side, not that which hath only this to recommend it, that it is farther removed from the Danger of Sinning; but that which is freest from all Dangers and Inconveniences of all Kinds whatsoever: So as that shall always be the safer Side of a Doubtful Case, which, after all Things considered, doth appear to be most agreeable to the Man's Duty in the Circumstances he is in, or which is attended with the fewest Absurdities and Evil Consequences of all Sorts; and doth best serve all the Interests Spiritual and Temporal, taken both together, that a Wise and a Good Man can propose to himself: I say, if any Man do mean this by the safer Side, I do readily agree with him, that it will for ever, and in all Cases, be a True, and a Wise, and a Good Rule; (nay, I add,) the only one, to a Doubting Conscience, to follow the safer Side.

But then, in this Sense of Safety, the safer Side, and the more Reasonable, is all one Thing. And consequently this Rule of following the safer Side, and that I before laid down, of following the more Reasonable, are the same in Sense, though differently expressed. Only I think this latter Way of Expression is more plain, and less liable to Misconstruction, and therefore I chose it. But it is indifferent to me how Men Word Things, so long as we agree in our Sense.

II. Having

II. Having thus given an Account of the General Rule by which a Man is to determine himself in Doubtful Cases; I come now, in the Second Place, to treat of the several Heads, or Sorts of Doubtful Cases, wherein a Man's Conscience is concerned, and to make Application of this Rule to them; and this it will be no hard Matter to do, admitting the Grounds we have before laid down.

There is no Doubt wherein Conscience is concerned, but it will of Necessity fall under one of these Two Sorts. It is either a Single Doubt, or a Double one.

We call that a Single Doubt, when a Man doubts only on one Side of the Action, but is very well satisfied as to the other. As for Instance, he doubts concerning this or the other particular Action, whether it be Lawful for him to do it: But on the other Side, he hath no Doubt, but is very well assured, that he may Lawfully let it alone. Or, on the contrary, he is very well satisfied that the Action is Lawful, and that he may do it: But he doubts whether God's Law hath not made it a Duty, so that he cannot Lawfully omit it. This is that which we call a Single Doubt.

We call that a Double Doubt, where a Man doubts on both Sides of an Action; that is to say, he doubts on one Side, whether he be not bound to do this Action; God's Law, for any Thing he knows, made it

it a Duty. But on the other Side, so is the Action Circumstantiated with respect to him, or he with respect to it, that he doubts whether he be not bound to forbear the Action, as it is now presented to him; God's Law having, for any Thing he knows, forbid it. So that he is at a Loss what to do, because he fears he may Sin, whether he doth the Action, or doth it not. I say, it will be impossible to put any doubtful Case wherein a Man's Conscience is concerned, which will not fall under one of these Two Heads.

I. Now, as to the Case of a Single Doubt, we may thus apply the General Rule. That when a Man doubts only on one Side of an Action, there it is more Reasonable to chuse that Side of the Action concerning which he hath no Doubt, than the other, concerning which he Doubts, supposing all other Considerations be equal.

And here comes in that famous Maxim, which hath obtained both among Christians and Heathens, Quod dubitas ne feceris; which, with the Restriction I have now mentioned, will for ever be good Advice in all Cases of this Nature.

It must needs be unreasonable to venture upon any Action where a Man hath the least Fear or Suspicion that it is possible, he may transgress some Law of God by it, when it is in his Power to Act without any Fear or Suspicion of that Kind; supposing all

all along, this Consideration of the Possibility of offending by this Action, be not over-ballanced, and so the Fear of it removed, by other Considerations which the Circumstances of the Action do suggest.

Thus, for Instance: Here is a Man Doubts whether it be allowable in a Christian to Drink a Health, or put out Money to Interest, or to go to Law; as having conversed with such Men, or such Books, as do condemn these Practices, and that not without some Colour from the Word of God. The Man is not, indeed, so convinced by their Discourses, as to have taken up any Opinion or Perswasion that these Practices are unlawful; nor would he Censure any Man that uses them, because he sees there are as Good Men, and for any Thing he knows, as good Arguments for the other Side: But he is not so clear in his Judgment about these Points, as to be able to pronounce any Thing positively concerning them either Way. He cannot say, that he believes them Lawful, though he is not perswaded that they are Unlawful, which is the true State of a Doubting Mind. Now in these, and all other such like Cases, the Rule is plain, That while a Man's Judgment continues thus in Suspence, it is more reasonable for him to forbear these Practices. For there is no Pretence of Obligation upon him from God's Law to engage in any of them, and why should should he rashly throw himself into Danger, by venturing upon an Action, concerning which he is uncertain whether it be Lawful or no? He runs no Hazard by forbearing these Things, but if he practise them he doth.

Thus far is right. But then, as I said, this is always to be understood with this Proviso, Cæteris paribus. For if there should happen to be such other Considerations in the Action, as have Force enough to overballance this Consideration of Uncertainty; it will then be reasonable to chuse that Side of the Action concerning which I did before doubt, rather than that of which I had no Doubt at all.

Thus, if the Man that makes a Question about any of the Three Things I before-mentioned, should light into such Circumstances, that, for Instance, he must either drink such a Single Health, or a Quarrel is like to ensue; nay, and that perhaps to the Danger of some of the Lives of the Company. Or again, That he has no Means of improving his Money (in which his whole Fortune consists) in any other Way but by that of Usury; so that he and his Family must in Time starve, unless they be maintained by this Course. Or Lastly, If an Orphan be trusted to his Care, and the Estate of that Orphan is so entangled, that he must be put upon the Necessity either of waging a Law-Suit for the clearing
it,

it, or suffering his near Relation, committed to his Charge, to be defrauded of his Right. I say, if the Cases happen to be thus Circumstantiated; he that before doubted in General, whether it was Lawful to drink a Health, or to put out Money to Usury; or to ingage in Law-Suits, may, I should think, certainly satisfy himself, that it is not only Lawful, but Expedient in this particular Case, notwithstanding his General Doubt to do any of these Things; and if he be a Wise Man, he will make no Scruple of Acting accordingly.

Indeed he cannot be well excused if he do not thus Act: For it will not be sufficient to say, I doubt whether these Practises are Lawful or Unlawful, and therefore I dare not ingage in them. Why Man? If you only Doubt about them, you do by this acknowledge, that for any Thing you know they may be Lawful, as well as that for any Thing you know they may be Unlawful. And if you be thus in equilibrio, sure such pressing Considerations as those which are presented in this Case, ought to turn the Ballance. Otherwise I do not know how you will Answer, either to your self, or the World, for the Consequences that may ensue. For my Part, in such Cases as these I should think, that nothing less than a Belief or Perswasion that the Thing in Question is unlawful, will justify a Man's Prudence in Acting on that Side which he calls the Safer, and which, had not these Circumstances happened, would really have been so.

To Conclude; If a great Good may be compassed, or a great Evil may be avoided, by doing a Thing concerning which we have a General Speculative Doubt whether it be Lawful or no; this very Consideration is in Reason sufficient to silence the Doubt: that is, it is enough to perswade us, that it is not only Lawful but Advisable to do that in the present Circumstances, which before, and out of those Circumstances, we Doubted in General whether it was Lawful to be done or no.

II. And thus much concerning the Rule by which we are to proceed in the Case of a Single Doubt; I now come to consider that which we call a Double Doubt, and to shew what is to be done in that Case.

A Double Doubt, as I have said, is this, when a Man doubts on both sides of an Action; that is to say, he doubts on one side whether he be not bound to do this Action, God's Law having for any thing he knows commanded it; but on the other side, so doth the Action come circumstantiated to him, that he doubts whether he be not by some other Law of God, bound to forbear it as it is now offer'd: So that he is at a loss what to do, because he fears he may sin whether he do the Action, or do it not.

That which is commonly said in this Case, viz. That the Man that is entangled must get his Doubt removed, and then he may with a safe Conscience act or not act, according as he is satisfied in his own Mind, is, as I said before, very often impertinent: For it is no more in a Man's power to leave off Doubting when he will, than it is in the power of a Sick Man to be Well when he will. And besides, though it might be supposed, that the Man with Time and good Counsel might be enabled to extricate himself out of this Perplexity; yet in our Case that Benefit is not always allowed: For perhaps the Circumstances of the Case are such, that the Man is under a present necessity either of acting or not acting, and whether he doth the one or the other, he doubts he offends God.

But what then is a Man to do in this Case? Why, he is to follow the same Rule that he doth in all other Doubtful Cases, and which we have been all this while insisting on; that is to say, he is to Act as reasonably as he can: And if he do this, I am sure he incurs no blame, whether he do the Action he doubts about, or do it not. If there should happen to be any Sin in the Action, it comes upon some other account than that of Acting with a Doubting Conscience.

But

But now the Application of this General Rule to our present Case is various, according to the Degrees of the Man's Doubtfulness, compared with the Degrees of the sin he is in danger of, by acting on the one side or the other. And likewise according as other Considerations do happen about the Action, which ought to have some influence in determining the Man. However, I think all those varieties may be comprized in these Four following Propositions.

First, If the Sin we are afraid of, in doing or not doing the Action, doth on both sides appear equal, there we are to determine ourselves to that side where we have the least Doubt of offending God; that is to say, to that side which to our Reason appears more Probable to be free from the danger of Sin, rather than that other which is less Probable to be free from that danger: For certainly this will always be reasonable; that a Man should chuse a greater Probability before a less, supposing all other Things equal.

But Secondly, If we doubt equally on both sides; so that we apprehend that we are in like danger of transgressing God's Law, whether we do the Action or do it not: In this Case we are to determine ourselves to that side on which it doth appear we shall be guilty of the least Sin: For certainly; by the same reason for which we are obliged not to Sin at all, we shall be obliged to chuse a less Sin rather than a greater, where we cannot avoid Sinning.

Thirdly, If the Doubt be unequal, and the Sin likewise unequal; that is, if it so happen that one side of the Case is more probable, but the other side less sinful, as not involving a Man in so heinous a Crime as the other would, if it should prove that he was mistaken: In this Case a Man may chuse either the one side or the other; according as the degree of the Probability, or the degree of the Sin, compared with one another, do preponderate.

The Case may be such, that there is so much more Probability on the one side than the other, and likewise so inconsiderable a difference and disproportion between the Sins we are in danger of on each side, that a Wise Man will be determined to the more Probable side, and venture all the Consequences of his Mistakes on the other.

But then, on the other hand, the Case may likewise be such, that the Consequences on one side, if a Man should happen to be mistaken, are so terrible, that they will over-balance all the Probabilities on the other side, let them be never so great; (supposing they do not amount to so much evidence as to create a Perswasion, and so put a Man out of the state of Doubting.) Now here a Wise Man will not Act on the more Probable side, but on that which sets him free from the danger of these Consequences. Thus, if a Prisoner was Tryed for a Capital Offence, and the Evidence against him doth not appear so full as to create a Perswasion in the Judge or Jury that the Man is Guilty, though indeed it is more Probable that he is, than that he is not: In this Case I believe all Men will say, that considering there is so great a disproportion between the Evil of condemning an Innocent Person, and acquitting a Guilty one, (it being Murder in the one Case) the Judge or Jury should rather follow the safer side than the more Probable, and so clear the Man, rather than find him Guilty.

Fourthly, If the Case be such, that the Man doubts equally on both sides, and the Sin he is afraid of appears likewise to him to be equal on both sides: Here other Considerations are to turn the Ballance. In this Case he is to consider what Prudential Inducements he has to do the Action, or forbear it; as how far his Ease and Quiet, his Advantage and Benefit, his good Name and Reputation, his Friends or his Family is concerned one way or other; and since all other Considerations, that are of a Moral Nature, are equal on both sides; those of this kind, which are the strongest, must add so much weight to the Scale, as to determine the Man either to do the Action he doubts about, or to let it alone.

And indeed, it cannot be denied, that these Considerations will often have a great Influence even upon a good Man, not only in the Case I have now put, where the directly Moral Arguments are equal on both sides, but in all the other doubtful Cases I before mentioned.

We may talk very rationally about the Degrees of Probability, and the Degrees of Sin, and what weight each of them is to have with us, and all this with so much Evidence, that no Man can deny the reasonableness of the Rules we lay down in Thesi: But yet when we come to Act, we find that scarce any Man doth exactly proceed according to these Rules; but mixes some of these Prudential Considerations which I have mentioned with his Deliberations, and though they do not wholly, yet they help to turn the Ballance. And for my part, I dare not say, that all those who thus proceed, are to be blamed for so doing; supposing that the Case wherein they thus Act, be a Case of pure Doubt, and there be no Perswasion on either side; and withal, that the Man who thus proceeds, is satisfied in his own Mind with his proceeding. The truth is, when all is said, every Man in doubtful Cases is left to his own Discretion; and if he Acts according to the best Reason he hath, he is not culpable, though he be mistaken in his Measures.

These are all the Rules that are to be given in the Case of a Double Doubt. And I think No-body can object against the Truth of them. But I am sensible of another Objection that may be made, and that is, Why I do mention them at all; Since to the Generality of Men, for whom this Discourse is intended, they seem altogether unpracticable. For how few are there who are Competent Judges of these different Degrees of Probability or Sinfulness in an Action that we here talk of, and much less are capable of so ballancing these Things one with another, as to be able from thence to form a good Judgment upon the whole Matter.

But to this I Answer, That if Rules are to be given at all for the determining Men in Doubtful Cases, we must give these, because we can give no other. These being the only Principles that Men have to govern their Actions by in these Cases. And I trust also, they will not be wholly useless to the most ordinary Capacities, for the Purposes they are intended. Because all may hereby at least learn thus much, viz. What Methods they are to proceed by for the guidance of their Actions in Doubtful Cases. And though they may have false Notions of the Dangers and the De- grees of particular Sins, and so may sometimes make false Applications of these Rules to their own Case; yet it is enough for their Justification, as I said before, that they have Reasoned as well they can. Since they are not bound to Act in Doubtful Cases, according to what is best and most reasonable in it self: But it is abundantly sufficient, that they do endeavour it.

But to render these Rules about a Double Doubt more intelligible and more useful, I think it will not be amiss to give my Reader a Specimen, both how they are to be applied to particular Cases, and likewise when they are applied, what light they give to a Man for the chusing his way in any Doubtful Case he happens to be engaged in. And since it would take up too much room to give every particular Rule a several Instance, I shall pitch upon one Case, under which I may consider all the Varieties of a Double Doubt I have now represented; and it shall be that Celebrated Case of the Sacrament, than which we have not a greater or a more frequent Instance of this kind of Doubt in any Case among us. And because I would not by the discussion of this Case, divert my Reader (against his Will) from the main Argument, I have taken care to have it so marked in the Print, that every one may without trouble (if he have

have no mind to read it) pass it over as a long Parenthesis, and go on to the next Point.

This is the Case.

‘ Here is a Man that believes it to be his ‘ Duty to take all Opportunities of Re‘ ceiving the Sacrament, or at least to ‘ take them frequently : But on the other ‘ side, such is his Condition, that he is ‘ constantly under great Fears and Ap‘ prehensions of his being unqualified for ‘ it; and to receive the Sacrament Unwor- ‘ thily he knows to be a great Sin: Not
 ‘ that there is any grievous notorious Sin ‘ lies upon his Conscience unrepented of;
 ‘ much less that he is engaged in some ‘ vicious Course, which he is unwilling ‘ that his new Vows at his approach to ‘ the Lord’s Table should divorce him
 ‘ from: For indeed he desires and endea‘ vours in all Things to live honestly, and to ‘ keep a Conscience void of offence towards ‘ God and towards Man.

‘ But this is the Case, He is not so ‘ devout a Christian, nor lives so Pure and ‘ Spiritual a Life, as he thinks becomes
 ‘ the Partakers of such Heavenly Food.
 ‘ Or perhaps he cannot bring himself to ‘ so feeling a Sense and Contrition for his ‘ past Sins, or such ardours of Love and ‘ Devotion to our Saviour, as he hath ‘ been taught that every worthy Com-‘ municant ought to be affected with.

‘ Or

‘ Or perhaps he wants Faith in the Blood ‘ of Christ, not being able to apply the ‘ Benefits of his Passion so comfortably to ‘ his own Heart as he thinks he ought to ‘ do. Or perhaps, in the last place, his ‘ mind is so haunted with a company of ‘ idle and naughty Fancies, especially when ‘ he sets himself to be more than ordina‘ rily serious, that he thinks it would ‘ be a great Profanation of the Sacra‘ ment, for him to come to it in such ‘ Circumstances.

‘ These, or such like, are the Things
 ‘ that trouble him. And though he hath ‘ several Times endeavoured to put him‘ self into a better Condition, yet he ‘ could never satisfy himself, nor get over ‘ these difficulties. What now must this ‘ Man do? He would fain receive the Sa‘ crament, as thinking himself bound to do ‘ it; but he dare not receive it, as looking ‘ upon himself to be unqualified for it. If ‘ he do not come to the Lord’s Table,
 ‘ he denies his Attendance on the most ‘ Solemn Ordinance of Christianity, and ‘ so doubts he Sins on that account: If ‘ he do come, he doubts he approaches ‘ unworthily, and so Sins upon that ‘ account.

‘ It is here to be remembered, that the ‘ Question to be spoken to in this Case
 ‘ is not this; What Course the Man is to ‘ take for the Curing or Removing his ‘ Doubt-

‘ Doubtfulness in this matter, that so he ‘ may come to the Sacrament with Sa‘ tisfaction to his own Mind: but this;
‘ Supposing the Man after all his endea‘ vours cannot cure or remove his Doubt,
‘ what he must do? Must he come to the ‘ Sacrament, or must he forbear? One ‘ of them he must do, and yet, which of ‘ them soever he chuseth, he fears he ‘ Sins.

‘ If the former had been the Question, the ‘ Resolution of it would have been thus:
‘ That the Man is to use the best Means ‘ he can to get better Instruction and ‘ Information about the Nature and Ends
‘ of the Christian Sacrament; and about ‘ the Qualities and Dispositions that are ‘ needful to fit a Man for it, particularly ‘ those of Faith and Repentance. For it is ‘ the Man’s Ignorance or Mistake about ‘ these Things, that makes him pass so ‘ hard a Censure upon himself, and so ‘ occasions all the Doubtfulness in this ‘ Case. If he once come rightly to un‘ derstand these Points, his Doubts would ‘ of themselves fall to the Ground; and ‘ the Man would be perfectly satisfied,
‘ that as his Case is (supposing it to be ‘ such as I have now represented) he ‘ may, without any Fear or Scruple in ‘ the World, at any time approach to the ‘ Holy Table; because he is indeed in ‘ such a State and Disposition of Mind,

A Discourse concerning

‘ as renders him habitually qualified for the ‘ performance of that Duty.

‘ But this, as I said, is not the Question
 ‘ before us; we here suppose the Man, ‘ either through want of Means of In- ‘ struction, or through strong Prejudices
 ‘ from Education, or the like, to be inca‘ pable at present of this Satisfaction, and ‘ to be in great perplexity on both sides;
 ‘ and that which we are to enquire into
 ‘ is, to which side of the doubtful Case
 ‘ he must determine himself. Shall he ‘ receive the Sacrament doubting as he ‘ doth? or shall he forbear it doubting as ‘ he doth?

‘ Now I say, a Man hath no other ‘ way of coming to a Resolution of this ‘ Question, but by applying the Rules I ‘ before laid down to his present Case;
 ‘ which may be be done in this manner.

‘ Since the Man we speak of doubteth
 ‘ that he Sins whether he come to the ‘ Sacrament, or forbear, the First thing
 ‘ to be considered is, on which side he ‘ doubts least; or which side appears ‘ to him most likely and probable to be ‘ free from the danger of Sinning: For,
 ‘ if all other things in the Case be equal, the ‘ Ballance is to be turned on that side, accord‘ ing to our first Proposition.

‘ Now if our present Question be put ‘ upon this Issue, I am confident the ‘ Man, whose Case I am representing, ‘ will

' will think it more reasonable to repair
 ' to the Sacrament, even in that evil
 ' posture he takes himself to be; than ' customarily to abstain from it: Because
 ' by thus doing, he doth certainly follow
 ' the more probable, and the less doubtful
 ' or dangerous side of the Question. For ' it is evident, he cannot pretend to be ' half so certain of this Particular, viz.
 ' That he is unprepared for the Sacrament,
 ' which is the reason of his abstaining, as ' he is certain in the General that it is his ' Duty to frequent it.

' If indeed the Man was a Person of ill
 ' Life and Manners: Or if he had been ' lately guilty of any Notorious Wilful
 ' Sin, and came to the Lord's Table with
 ' that Sin upon his Conscience unrepented
 ' of; then I will grant he had some rea' son to believe that he was as much in ' danger of Sinning, by receiving unwor' thily; as by withdrawing himself from ' God's Ordinance. But the Case here
 ' is not so. The Man is really an honest
 ' well-meaning Christian, nor hath he ' done any thing of late, which can give ' him any suspicion of his having forfeited
 ' that Title. Only through his Mistake
 ' about the Notion of Preparation for the ' Sacrament, he apprehends, he is not ' qualified as he ought to be; though yet
 ' if most others were to be Judges of his ' Condition, they would say, he was.

' Why:

' Why: certainly in this Case, it must ' be evident to the Man, that he runs a ' greater danger of transgressing the Law
 ' of God by absenting himself from the ' Communion, especially if he do it
 ' customarily; than if he should come to it
 ' with all his Fears and Doubts about him:
 ' For, as I said, his Fears and Doubts of his ' own unworthiness, cannot possibly be
 ' so well grounded as his Fears and Doubts
 ' that he Sins against God by habitually ' denying his attendance on that great
 ' Christian Service. For those are founded ' on the express Laws of the Gospel: The ' others are founded only on uncertain con-
 ' jectural Surmises about his own Condition:
 ' that is to say, he is certain that he is bound
 ' to take frequent Opportunities of paying
 ' his Homage to Jesus Christ in the Sacra' ment; but he cannot pretend to have ' such assurance in his Case that he is un-
 ' qualified for paying that Homage.

' But Secondly, Let us suppose the ' Doubt is equal on both sides: That is to ' say, that the Man hath as much reason ' to believe that he is an unworthy Receiver
 ' if he receives at all, as he hath reason ' to believe that it is a Sin in him if he
 ' do not receive: Which yet can hardly ' be supposed in our Case; but let us sup' pose it, nay, if you please, let us suppose
 ' the Man doth certainly Sin, whether he ' receives or forbears: Here then this comes

' to

' to be considered; which of these Two
 ' Sins is the least: To Receive unworthily,
 ' yet out of a Sense of Duty, or not to ' receive at all. For on which side soever
 ' this last Sin happens to be, to that side
 ' the Man is to determine himself accord' ing to our second Rule. It being eter-
 ' nally reasonable, That of Two Evils we should
 ' chuse the least, when we cannot avoid both.

' Now putting the Case before us upon
 ' this Issue there needs no more to be ' done for the resolving it, than only to ' ask this general Question.

' Which is the greater Sin of these Two;
 ' for a Man to omit a known Duty, and so
 ' to break a known Law of God for Con-
 ' science sake; or to yeild Obedience to that ' Law for Conscience sake, when yet it so ' happens, that a Man cannot do that, with' out breaking another Law of God in the ' manner of his Performance of that Duty?
 ' For my part, I should think, that the ' Man who doth this last, though he can' not be said to be Innocent, yet is he
 ' guilty in a far less degree, than the Man
 ' that practiseth the former, and a great ' deal more is to be said in his Justification.

' Let us suppose Two Men, both of them
 ' conscious to themselves, that as Things
 ' stand with them, they are not in a fit
 ' Condition, so much as to say their Pray-
 ' ers, or to perform any other act of Re' ligious Worship as they ought to do; now
 ' one

‘ one of these Men doth upon this account ‘ forbear all Prayers both Publick and Private;
 ‘ neither using his Closet, nor frequent‘ ing the Church. The other hath such a ‘ Sense of what both Natural Religion and ‘ Christianity do oblige him to in this mat‘ ter, that he dares not forbear his usual
 ‘ Offices either in Publick or Private, though ‘ yet he believes he sinfully performs them.

‘ If the Question now be put, which of ‘ these Two is the better Man, or the least ‘ Offender, I dare say that all Men will ‘ give their Judgment in favour of the lat‘ ter, though yet no wise Man will think ‘ that this Person is to be excused for li‘ ving at such a rate, that he cannot say
 ‘ his Prayers without Sin.

‘ This Judgment, I say, Men would ‘ pass in this Case; and there is a great ‘ deal of reason for it. For certainly no
 ‘ indisposition that a Man hath contracted,
 ‘ of what nature soever, will take off from ‘ his Obligation to obey the Laws of God.

‘ If a Man cannot do his Duty so well ‘ as he ought, he must at least do it as ‘ well as he can. And therefore let his ‘ Circumstances be what they will, he ‘ must needs be less Criminal in perform‘ ing a known Duty in the best manner
 ‘ that his Condition will allow him, though ‘ with many and deserved Reflections upon
 ‘ his own Unworthiness, than in wholly omit‘ ting or disusing that Duty. Because a ‘ neglect

‘ neglect in the manner of Performing a ‘ Duty, is a less Fault than to neglect
 ‘ the Substance of it.

‘ Let this now that I have said be ap‘ plied to our Case, and we have an easie
 ‘ resolution of the Question before us.
 ‘ viz. That since a greater Sin is to be a‘ voided before a less, when a Man sup‘ poses himself to be under a necessity of ‘ being guilty of one; it is more reason‘ able that the Man we speak of, should ‘ come to the Sacrament with all his Doubts ‘ concerning his unworthiness, than that he ‘ should customarily and habitually with‘ draw himself from it, because it is a ‘ greater Sin to do this latter than the ‘ former.

‘ Well, but some say, How can this ‘ consist with St. Paul’s Doctrine? Who ‘ expressly affirms, That whoever eateth and 1 Cor. 11.
 ‘ drinketh unworthily; eateth and drinketh 29°
 ‘ Damnation to himself. Can there be any ‘ more dreadful Sin than that, which if ‘ a Man be guilty of, it will actually ‘ Damn him? Certainly one would think
 ‘ by this, that a Man runs a much less ‘ hazard in not Receiving at all, than in ‘ venturing to Receive whilst he hath the ‘ least Doubt that he Receives unwor‘ thily, considering the dreadful Conse‘ quences of it.

‘ But to this I briefly Answer. Such a ‘ Man as we all along suppose in our ‘ Case,

' Case, is in no Danger at all of Receiving
 ' unworthily, in the Sense that St. Paul
 ' useth this Term. For the unworthy
 ' receiving that he so severely Censures in
 ' the Corinthians, was their approaching to
 ' the Lord's Table with so little a sense
 ' of what they were about, that they ' made no distinction between the Lord's
 ' Body and common Food: But under a Pre-
 ' tence of meeting for the Celebration
 ' of the Lord's Supper, they used the ' Church of God as if it was an Eating or
 ' Tipling House: Some of them Revelling
 ' it there to that degree, that they went ' away Drunk from these Religious As-' semblies. All this appears from the ' Text. But I hope none among us
 ' (especially none of those who are so ' doubtful about their being duly quali' fied) do profane the Sacrament in this ' manner.

Ibid. v. 29.
 v. 20, 21,
 22.

' But further, Perhaps the Damnation
 ' which St. Paul here denounces, is not ' so frightful as is commonly apprehended.
 ' For all that he saith (if either the O' riginal or the Margin of our Engliss
 ' Bibles be consulted) will appear to be
 ' this, He that eateth and drinketh unwor-
 ' thily, eateth and drinketh Judgment to
 ' himself. Meaning hereby, in all proba' bility, that he who doth thus affront our ' Lord's Institution, by making no distin' ction between the Bread of the Sacra' ment

' ment and common Meat; doth by this
 ' his profaneness draw severe Judgments
 ' of God upon himself. For, for this cause Ver. 30.
 ' (saith he) many are weak and sickly among
 ' you, and many are fallen asleep: But here
 ' is not a Word of Everlasting Damnation;
 ' much less of any Man's being put into
 ' that State by thus receiving unworthily:
 ' Unless any Man will say, that all those ' who are visited with God's Judgments
 ' in this World, are in the State of Dam-
 ' nation as to the next. Which is so far ' from being true, that St. Paul in this very ' Place affirms the contrary, viz. in the
 ' 32d Verse, where he tells us, That When
 ' we are thus judged [in this World] we ' are chastened of the Lord, that we should ' not be condemned with the World, i. e. with
 ' Wicked Men in another Life.

' But further, Admitting St. Paul in ' these Words to mean Damnation in the ' usual Sense, yet still the utmost they ' can come to, will be no more than this:
 ' That whosoever eateth and drinketh thus
 ' unworthily, as the Corinthians did, is guilty
 ' of a Damnable Sin. But now there are ' a great many other Cases besides this of
 ' the Sacrament, in which a Man is equal' ly guilty of a Damnable Sin, if he do ' not perform his Duty as he ought to ' do. He that Prays or Hears unworthi-
 ' ly; He that Fasts or gives Alms unwor' thily: In a word, He that in any In‘ stance performs the Worship of God,

 ‘ or professeth the Christian Religion un-‘ worthily : I say, such a Man, according ‘ to the Protestant Doctrine, may be said
 ‘ to do these things to his own Damnation,
 ‘ upon the same account that he is said
 ‘ to Eat and Drink his own Damnation
 ‘ that Communicates unworthily in the ‘ Sacrament; though indeed not in so ‘ high a degree. That is to say, such ‘ a Man is guilty of a Sin that is in its ‘ own Nature Damnable, and may prove ‘ actually so to him, unless either by a ‘ particular or general Repentance he ob‘ tains God’s Pardon for it. But yet for ‘ all this, there is no Man will for these ‘ Reasons think it adviseable to leave off
 ‘ the practice of these Duties; but the ‘ only Consequence he will draw from ‘ hence, is, that he is so much the more ‘ concerned to take care that he perform
 ‘ them as he ought to do.

‘ But in the last place. Let the Sin of ‘ coming to the Sacrament unworthily,
 ‘ be as great and as damnable as we rea‘ sonably can suppose it; yet this is that ‘ we contend for, the Sin of totally with‘ drawing from it, is much greater and ‘ more damnable: So that if he who ‘ partakes of it unworthily, doth eat and ‘ drink Damnation to himself; he that par-
 ‘ takes not at all, is so far from mending
 ‘ the matter, that he doth much increase ‘ that Damnation.

‘ The

‘ The Truth of this doth fully appear ‘ from what I have before spoke in ‘ General, concerning the much greater ‘ Sin of transgressing a known Law of ‘ God, than of observing that Law as well
 ‘ as we can, though with much unworthi‘ ness. I will only add this further, with ‘ reference to this Particular of Receiving ‘ the Sacrament.

‘ Though I am far from encouraging
 ‘ any to approach to the Lord’s Table
 ‘ without due Qualifications; or from ex‘ tenuating any Man’s Sin that comes un-‘ worthily; (unworthily I mean in the ‘ Scripture Sense of that Word, and not as ‘ it is understood by many melancholly scru‘ pulous Persons) Yet this I say; That if ‘ Men did seriously consider what a Sin it is ‘ to live without the Sacrament, it being no ‘ other, than living in an open affront to
 ‘ the exprefs Institution of our Lord Jesus,
 ‘ and a renouncing the Worship of God
 ‘ and the Communion of the Church, in the ‘ great Instance of Christian Worship and ‘ Christian Communion: And withal,
 ‘ what dreadful Consequences they bring ‘ upon themselves hereby, even the depri‘ ving themselves of the chief of those ordi‘ nary means which our Lord hath appoint‘ ed for the obtaining Remission of Sins, and ‘ the Grace and Influence of his Holy Spirit :
 ‘ I say, if Men did seriously consider these ‘ Things, they would not look upon it as

A Discourse concerning

‘ so slight a matter, voluntarily to Excom‘ municate themselves as to the partaking
 ‘ in this great Duty and Priviledge of ‘ Christians; but what Apprehensions so-
 ‘ ever they had of the Sin, and the danger ‘ of receiving unworthily, they would for ‘ all that, think it more sinful and more ‘ dangerous not to receive at all.

‘ I have said enough in Answer to this ‘ Objection from St. Paul; perhaps too ‘ much, considering how often these ‘ Things have been said. I will now go ‘ on with our Case.

‘ In the Third place, therefore, let us ‘ suppose our Doubting Man, (for these or ‘ such like Reasons as we have given) to ‘ have such a Sense of his Duty, that he ‘ generally takes the opportunities that are ‘ offered him, of doing Honour to our ‘ Lord, by partaking in his Supper, though ‘ perhaps he is not often very well satisfied
 ‘ about his Preparation : But so it happens,
 ‘ that since his last Communicating, he ‘ finds his Mind in a much worse frame
 ‘ than it used to be. He hath lived more ‘ loosely and carelessly than he was wont;
 ‘ or perhaps he hath been very lately guilty
 ‘ of some grievous Sin that lies heavy up‘ on his Conscience: So that when his ‘ next usual time of Receiving comes, he ‘ cannot but apprehend himself in a very ‘ unfit Condition to Communicate in so Sa‘ cred a Mystery. Upon this he is in ‘ a great

‘ a great perplexity what to do. For on ‘ the one side, he thinks he hath more ‘ reason to believe that he offends God if he ‘ comes to the Sacrament in these Circum‘ stances, than if he forbears; because he ‘ is more certain, that there is a Law of ‘ God that forbids him to come unworthi-
 ‘ ly, than he is certain, that there is a ‘ Law of God that commands him to re- ‘ ceive every time that he hath opportunity.
 ‘ But now, on the other hand, if it should ‘ prove that he is really bound by God’s ‘ Law to Commemorate the Death of ‘ Christ in the Sacrament, every time that ‘ an opportunity is offered; he is sensible
 ‘ in that Case, it is a greater Sin to ne‘ glect this Duty, than to perform it un-‘ worthily, so long still as he performs it out ‘ of Conscience. What now is the Man
 ‘ to do in these Circumstances?

‘ This is an exact Instance of the Case
 ‘ I spoke to in my Third Proposition;
 ‘ where on one Side the Man runs a greater ‘ Danger of Sinning; but on the other ‘ Side, if he should prove mistaken, he Sins
 ‘ in a greater Degree.

‘ Now for a Resolution of this Case, I ‘ say, That if the Question be put con‘ cerning the Man’s absenting himself only ‘ Once or Twice from the Communion, in ‘ order to the Exercise of Repentance, and ‘ the putting himself into a better frame of ‘ Mind against another Opportunity: The ‘ Answer (according to our Third Proposi‘ tion) must be this, That it is very rea‘ sonable thus to do.

‘ And there is good ground for this An‘ swer. For certainly a Man is more in ‘ danger of Sinning, if he receive unwor‘ thily, than if he do not receive every ‘ Time that there is a Communion. There ‘ being an exprefs Law against the one, but ‘ no exprefs Law obliging to the other. For ‘ Christ hath no more appointed that we ‘ should receive the Sacrament so many ‘ times in a Year, than he hath appointed
 ‘ that we should Pray so many times in a ‘ Day; or that we should give such a de-‘ terminate Proportion of our Annual In‘ come to Charitable Uses. As to these ‘ Things he hath bound us in the General;
 ‘ but as to the Particulars, the Circumstan‘ ces of our Condition, and the Laws of ‘ our Superiors are to determine us. Only
 ‘ this we are to remember, that the oftner
 ‘ we perform these Duties it is the better;
 ‘ and we can hardly be said to be Chri‘ stians, if we do not perform them fre- ‘ quently.

‘ This now being so: Though it be true
 ‘ that a Man would be guilty of a greater ‘ Sin, if he should at any Time, though
 ‘ but once, abstain from the Communion, ‘ than if he should come to it with such ‘ Unworthiness as we are here speaking of;
 ‘ supposing that Christ’s Law had precisely ‘ tied

' tied him up to Communicate every time
 ' that a Communion is appointed: Yet
 ' since there is so little Appearance of Rea' son to conclude that Christ has thus tied
 ' him up; and withal, on the other Hand,
 ' he runs so certain a Danger of Sinning, if
 ' he should Communicate at this Time,
 ' apprehending himself to be so unworthy
 ' as he doth: This Consideration of the ' certain Danger, must needs, in this Case,
 ' over-balance the other of the greater Sin,
 ' and make it appear more reasonable to
 ' the Man to suspend his Receiving to ano' ther Opportunity, against which Time
 ' he hopes to be better prepared, than to
 ' adventure upon it in his present Circum' stances.

' But then, if the Question be put con' cerning the Man's absenting himself Ca-
 ' stomarily and Habitually from the Lord's
 ' Table upon this Account of Unworthiness,
 ' that which I have now said will not hold.
 ' For in this Case, the Man is in as much ' danger of Sinning by not Receiving at all, as
 ' by Receiving unworthily; nay, and a great ' deal more, as I shewed in my First Par' ticular about this Case. And withal, he ' is guilty of a much greater Sin in wholly ' withdrawing from the Sacrament, than
 ' in coming to it, though with never so
 ' great Apprehensions of his own Unwor' thiness, as I shewed in my Second. And
 ' therefore, since the Danger is at least equal
 ' on

‘ on both Sides, he must chuse that Side
 ‘ on which the least Sin lies: That is to ‘ say, he must Communicate frequently ‘ (at least so often as the Laws of the ‘ Church do enjoin him, which is Three ‘ times a Year) though he be in Danger of ‘ doing it unworthily, rather than not Com‘ municate at all.

‘ Having thus gone through Three of ‘ our Propositions concerning a Double ‘ Doubt; All that remains is, to put our ‘ Case about the Sacrament so, as that it ‘ may serve for an Instance or Illustration of ‘ our Fourth and Last.

‘ Here, therefore, we are to suppose our ‘ Doubting Man to be in such a Condition,
 ‘ that he apprehends he runs an equal Dan- ‘ ger of Sinning, whether he receives the Sa‘ crament, or receives it not. And withal,
 ‘ so unskilful a Judge is he of the Morality
 ‘ of Actions, that he apprehends no great ‘ Difference in the Degree of the Sin, whe‘ ther he do the one or the other.

‘ In this Case now, all the Man can do is,
 ‘ to consider what Inducements he has, in ‘ Point of Prudence or Interest, to do or to ‘ forbear the Action he doubts about; for ‘ since all other Considerations in the Case
 ‘ are equal, those of this Kind are to turn
 ‘ the Ballance, according to our Fourth Pro‘ position.

‘ But if the Case turn upon this Point,
 ‘ I dare say no Man will be long doubtful,
 ‘ whe-

‘ whether he should frequent the Sacra‘ ment in Obedience to the Laws, or for‘ bear it. For it is plain that he Acts more ‘ Prudently, and more consults his own ‘ Advantage, both Temporal and Spiritual, ‘ by doing the former.

‘ As for the Temporal Advantages which
 ‘ a Man receives by obeying the Laws in ‘ this Matter, I will not now insist on ‘ them, though they are neither few nor ‘ inconsiderable. That which I desire ‘ chiefly to be here considered, is this, That ‘ in point of Spiritual Advantages, it is ‘ much more advisable for our Doubting ‘ Person to come to the Sacrament, than to ‘ abstain from it. For by frequenting this ‘ Ordinance, he takes the best Method,
 ‘ both to grow more worthy, if he be now
 ‘ unworthy, and likewise to cure the Doubts
 ‘ and Scruples he is now troubled with.
 ‘ But if he neglect this Means of Grace,
 ‘ he not only takes an effectual Course to ‘ increase and perpetuate his Fears and ‘ Doubts, (it being very probable that the ‘ longer he defers his receiving the Sacra‘ ment, still the more doubtful will he be of ‘ his being qualified for it;) but also is in ‘ great Danger to lose that Sense of Vertue
 ‘ and Religion that he now hath upon his ‘ Spirit, because he denies himself the Use ‘ of those Means and Helps which are ‘ most principally necessary for the pre‘ serving and maintaining it.

‘ Now,

‘ Now, I say, supposing all other Things
 ‘ in the Case equal, this very Consideration
 ‘ alone will prevail with a reasonable Man ‘ to come to the Sacrament, rather than for- ‘ bear it, even at the same time that he ‘ mightily doubts whether he shall not re‘ ceive unworthily.

‘ Thus have I given a large Exemplifi‘ cation of all our Rules concerning a Double ‘ Doubt in this Instance of receiving the Holy ‘ Communion. If I have dwelt too long ‘ upon this Subject, I hope the Frequency ‘ and the Importance of the Case, will in ‘ some Measure excuse me.

III. Having thus prepared our Way, by settling the Notion and the Rule of a Doubting Conscience, I come now more directly to the main Business that is before us, and that is, to give an Account what Share Humane Laws, Ecclesiastical or Civil, have in the Rule of a Doubting Conscience, or what Power they have to over-rule a Man's Doubts in any Case? Which, according to the Method I proposed, is the Third general Enquiry I am to resolve.

This is, indeed, the great Point that is disputed between us, and those of the Separation. Nay, I may say, it is the Point upon which that whole Controversy turns, so far as a Doubting Conscience is concerned in it. And therefore I shall discuss it as carefully as I can; but yet in such a general Way,

Way, as that what I have to offer, may serve for all other Doubtful Cases of this Nature, as well as this which we are now concerned in.

Their Assertion generally is this, (generally, I say: For there are some of the Dissenters, and those as Learned and Eminent as any, who have declared themselves of another Opinion) viz. That wherever a Man doubts concerning the Lawfulness of an Action, that very Doubt of his is a sufficient Reason to make him forbear that Action, though Lawful Authority hath commanded it.

On the other Side, our Assertion is, That wherever Lawful Authority hath Commanded an Action, that Command is (generally speaking) a sufficient Warrant for a Man to do that Action, though he Doubts whether in itself it be Lawful or no.

That I may speak clearly to this Point, I shall First Premise some Things, in order to our more distinct Understanding the State of the Question. Secondly, I shall shew the Grounds and Reasons of our Assertion. Thirdly, I shall endeavour to Answer the Chief Arguments that are brought on the other Side.

I. What I think needful to be premised for the right apprehending the State of the Question, I shall comprise in these following Particulars, by which it may be easily discerned how far we agree with the Dissenters

Dissenters in this Matter, and in what we differ from them.

First, We do readily own with them, that no Authority upon Earth can oblige its Subjects to do any Action which the Law of God hath forbidden, or to forbear any Action which the Law of God hath commanded.

Secondly, We agree likewise with them in this, That wherever any Subject hath taken up an Opinion or Perswasion that such an Action which his Governors have obliged him to, is against the Law of God; though it be a false Opinion or Perswasion, yet it will so far bind him, that he cannot in that Instance obey their Laws, without offending God. But then we say, on the other Hand, that though he cannot Obey without Sin, so long as this Perswasion continues; yet he is at the same Time guilty of Sin in disobeying, if he should prove to be mistaken, supposing that it was through his own Fault that he fell into that Mistake.

Thirdly, We acknowledge further, That in a Case where a Man cannot be said to be perswaded that the particular Action enjoined by Authority is a Sinful Action, but only he Doubts whether it be so or no; Yet if the Man hath a general Perswasion that no Publick Law will warrant him to Act against his Private Doubt; in this Case he can no more do the Action enjoined without Sin, than he could in the former Case.

But

But then, if this Notion of his be false, (as it is my present Business to shew that it is so,) he cannot be excused from Sin, in disobeying his Superiors, unless upon the former Account of inculpable Ignorance.

Fourthly, We say this farther, That a Culpable Doubt doth no more excuse the doing an Evil Action, than a Culpable Ignorance, i. e. it doth not excuse it. My Meaning is this; If a Man should be so little instructed in his Religion, as to Doubt whether that which is plainly enjoined by God's Law be a Duty or no: Or whether that which is plainly forbid by God's Law, be a Sin or no: (So plainly, I mean, that it is the Duty of every Honest Man to know this, and he must be most criminally Ignorant, that can be so stupid as to make a Doubt of it.) If, I say, in such a Case as this, a Man should Doubt whether the thing commanded by his Superiors was Lawful or no: We are so far from saying, that a Man doth well in obeying his Superiors in such an Instance where their Commands do so manifestly contradict the Laws of God; that on the contrary, we affirm the Man is highly accountable to God for all such Actions that he doth, though they were done purely in obedience to that Authority which God hath set over him; and purely in compliance^r with this Principle we are now contending for, viz. That in all all Doubtful Cafes, it is moſt reasonable to govern our Actions by the Commands of our Superiours:

Far are we therefore from aſſerting, That whatever our Governors do command, the Subject is bound to perform, ſo long as he only Doubts, but is not perſwaded of the unlawfulness of the Thing commanded: And that if there be any Sin in the Action, he that commands it is to Answer for it, and not he that obeys. For we do believe, that in Matters where a Man's Conſcience is concerned, every one is to be a Judge for himſelf, and muſt Answer for himſelf. And therefore, if our Superiours do command us to do an Action which their Superiour, God Almighty, hath forbid; we are Offenders if we do that Action, as well as they in commanding it, and that whether we do it Doubtfully, or with a Perſwaſion of its Lawfulneſs.

But then theſe Two Things are always to be remembred, Fiſt, That this is true only in ſuch Cafes where (as I ſaid) a Man is bound to know that God's Law hath forbid that Action which his Governours do command, and it is either through his groſs careleſneſs, or ſome other worſe Principle in him, that he knows it not, or is doubtful of it. For where-ever a Man is innocently, and inculpably Ignorant or Doubtful, how the Law

Law of God stands as to such a particular Matter which Authority hath obliged him to; as neither having means to come to the knowledge of it; or if he had, the Circumstances of his Condition not requiring that he should so accurately inform himself about it: In such a Case as this, I say, a Man cannot formally be said to be guilty of Sin in obeying his Lawful Superiours, though the Instance in which he obeys should happen to contradict some Law of God. For the Law of God here, is as no Law to him, that is, it doth not oblige him, because he neither knows it, nor is bound to know it. And where there is no Law, there is no Transgression.

And then further this is also to be remembered, that when we own that a Man may be guilty of Sin as well in obeying his Superiours, when he only doubts of the Lawfulness of the Action commanded, as when he is Perswaded that the Action is unlawful: I say, this we are to remember, that whenever this Case happens, the Man's Sin doth not lie in his obeying his Superiours with a Doubting Conscience (which is commonly run away with :) For the Man would as certainly Sin, if in this Case he did the Action with a Perswasion that it was Lawful; as he doth in doing it with a Doubt, whether it be Lawful or no. But the Sin lies here; viz. in doing an Action which God's Law hath forb-

bid; and which the Man would have known to be an ill Action, if he had been so honest, and so careful in minding his Duty as he should have been. It is his Acting contrary to a Law of God, that here makes the matter of the Sin; and it is his vicious criminal Ignorance of that Law which gives the Form to it. But as for the obeying his Superiours, whether with a Doubt or without one, that is no part or ingredient of the Sin at all.

Fifthly, We add this further, That whatever Power or Right we give to our Superiours, for the over-ruling a Private Doubt; it is not to be extended so far as either to destroy the Truth, or to supersede the Use of those Rules I have before laid down in order to the directing a Man's proceeding in the Case of a Double Doubt. For this Case of obeying the Commands of our Superiours, when we doubt of the Lawfulness of them, being a Double Doubt as properly as any other, those Rules are here to take place as much as in any other Instance.

And therefore where-ever a Man's Doubts are in this Case very unequal: That is to say, he apprehends himself in much greater danger of Sinning if he obey his Superiours in this particular Instance, than if he obey them not; as having abundantly more Reason to believe that their Commands are Unlawful, than that they are Lawful: In that Case we cannot say, he is obliged to obey, but should rather disobey, supposing all other Considerations be equal: For no Man is bound to obey his Superiours any farther than they command Lawful Things. : And therefore if it be two to one more Probable that their Command is Unlawful than that it is Lawful, it is likewise more Probable that a Man in this Instance is not to obey them. And a greater Probability, cæteris paribus, is always to be chosen before a less, according to our First Rule.

But, then though the Authority of our Superiours alone will not in this Case be of force enough to retrieve the Ballance which is so far inclined the other way, and to turn it on its own side; yet there may be, and very usually are, such other Arguments drawn from the Consideration of the greater Sin, and the more dreadful Consequences, of disobeying in this Instance, than of obeying: As will to any reasonable Man out-weigh all the Probabilities on the other side (so long as they are not so great as to create a Perswasion) and make it reasonable for the Man rather to do the Action, how strong soever his Doubts be of the unlawfulness of it (so long as they are but Doubts;) than to omit it after Lawful Authority hath enjoyned it.

But however this happen; it is always to be born in mind, as before, that if it should prove that our Superiours do command nothing in the particular Instances, but what they Lawfully may do: It will not justify any Man's disobedience, to say, that he apprehended it was more dangerous or more sinful to obey them, than to disobey them: For our Mistakes and false Reasonings, will not take off from the Obligation that is upon us to obey our Lawful Superiours in their Lawful Commands; unless, as I have often said, we can satisfy our selves, that in those Instances we neither were bound, nor had sufficient means to understand better.

And now having thus cleared our way, by removing from our Question those Things that are Foreign to it, and which indeed, by being usually blended with it, have made it more Intricate than otherwise it would be; we are pretty well prepared to propose our Point.

In the Sixth place then. Excluding (as we have done) out of our Case all those Things and Circumstances we have been speaking of, with none of which we have here to do; the plain Question before us is this.

Whether in the Case of a pure Doubt about the Lawfulness or Unlawfulness of an Action, where the Probabilities are on both sides pretty equal, and where likewise the Man concerned, hath done all that he was obliged to do for the satisfying himself:

Whether,

Whether, I say, in this Case the Command of a Lawful Superiour ought not so far to over-balance the Doubt, as not only to make it reasonable for the Man to do that of which he doubteth; but also to oblige him so to do?

We hold the Affirmative of this Question; and I now come to give the Reasons why we so hold, which is the Second Thing to be done under this Head.

II. Our Proposition is this, That if Lawful Authority do Command us to do a Thing which as on the one hand we cannot say it is Lawful; so on the other hand, we cannot say it is Unlawful; but our Judgment remains suspended, as having equal, or near equal Arguments on both sides: In such a Case as this, though if we were left to our own Choice, we should generally forbear the Action for the Reasons I before gave; yet being Commanded by our Superiours, who by the Law of God have Authority over us; it is not only reasonable, but our Duty to do it.

For First of all, even in point of Humility and Modesty, though there was no other Consideration; one would think that a Subject owes as much deference to the Judgment and Discretion of his Superiours as this comes to.

So much Influence as this, even a Confessor or a Private Friend hath over our Consciences. In a Case where we are altogether uncertain on both sides; we usually so far submit our selves to them, as to be swayed and over-ruled by what they advise; and that oftentimes not so much upon Consideration of the weight and force of their Reasons, as meerly upon this account, that we take them to be abler to guide us in these Affairs than we our selves are, as having better considered them, and seeing farther into them than we do.

I dare say there are few of those we are now disputing with, if a Doubt should happen to arise in their Conscience about the Lawfulness of any Practice in their Trade, or their other Civil Concernments, and they should upon this apply to some Friend of theirs, of whose Learning and Prudence, and Honesty they have a good Opinion, and put their Case to him; but would (if the Doubt was so equal on both sides as in our Case we suppose it) without any great difficulty be concluded and determined by the Judgment of the Man they thus apply to; especially if that Judgment be seconded by the suffrage of some other Learned Pious Men, whom they have thought fit upon this Occasion to consult likewise.

If now the Opinions of One or Two Private Men be of so much weight as to over-rule a Doubt about the Lawfulness of an Action, when the Reasons on both sides are equal; is it not very hard if the joynt Resolution solution and Determination of our Publick Governours, whose Office and Business it is to Consult and Command for the Best, should not in such a Case have the same Influence upon the Minds of their own Subjects? Or would it not argue much Self-conceit and Arrogance, and a very mean Opinion of our Superiours, and a great Contempt of their Authority, to refuse that respect to them which we give to every private Man almost that we think wiser than ourselves.

Secondly, I desire that may be taken notice of, which the Casuits, and in particular our Excellent Bishop Sanderson, have urged in this Affair, viz. It is a known Rule in Law, That in all disputed Cases, he that is in Possession of the Thing contended for, hath the Advantage of the other that contends with him, supposing all other Things be equal. In controverted Matters, the Right is always presumed to be on the side of the Possessor, unless there be a good Reason shewn to the contrary.

Thus for Instance, If I be in Possession of an Estate which another Man makes a Claim to; and it is equally doubtful whether that Estate belongs to him or me, yet so long as I have the Possession of it, I have a good Title to it by the Laws of God and Man; nor can I without Injustice be Dispossessed of it, till my Adversary hath made it appear that he hath a better Title to it than I.

A Discourse concerning

Let us now apply this Rule to our present Case. Here is a Contest or Dispute between the Superiour and the Subject, about a Matter of Right as to a particular Action. The Superiour saith, it is his Right to Command his Subject in this Instance, and accordingly doth Command him. The Subject saith, that he doubts whether his Superiour hath Right to Command him in this Instance, because he doubts whether this Command be not against the Law of God.

But in the mean time the Superiour is in actual Possession of the Power and Authority to Command, though it be uncertain and doubtful whether as to this Instance he do not exceed the just Limits of his Power.

Why, certainly by the former Rule, so long as the Case is thus doubtful, the Subject must yield; and at no hand by his disobedience dispossess his Superiour of that Authority he is possessed of, till he be convinced in his own Conscience that he hath greater reason to disobey in this Instance than to obey; which in our Case it is impossible he should have, because we here suppose that the Reasons on both sides are equal.

But, Thirdly, If this Argument appear too subtle; let the Question before us be decided by the Common Rule, viz. That in all Doubtful Cases the safest side is to be chosen.

Now

Now putting the Point upon this Issue, I ask which is safest, with respect to Conscience, for a Man to obey his Superiours in such a purely Doubtful Case as we here speak of; or to disobey them? I think this Question will soon be Answered by any Man that will attend to what I am going to represent, viz.

There is a Plain Law of God, and acknowledged by us to be so, that Commands us to obey our Superiours in all Lawful Things: But as to the particular Case, about which we are now supposed to Doubt, it is very Uncertain and Questionable to us, (even after our best endeavours to satisfy ourselves) whether there be any Law of God which forbiddeth that thing which our Superiours have enjoyned us.

This now being so, we thus Argue: If it should prove that our Superiours do in this Instance command an Unlawful Thing; yet the hazard we run in obeying them is very small and inconsiderable, in comparison with that we run in disobeying them, supposing it should indeed prove that they command nothing but what is Just and Right, and conducing to the Publick Good.

For by doing the former, by obeying our Superiours, the only hazard we run, is of transgressing some Unknown Law of God; some Law which doth no way appear to us; all that we can pronounce after our best enquiry being no more than this, that it may be there is such a Law, and it may be there is not: And therefore we may reasonably presume, that if there should indeed be such a Law of God; it is either not of such Consequence that we in our Circumstances were bound to know it; or if it was, that we had no sufficient means to come to the Knowledge of it: in each of which Cases, as I said, a Man's Ignorance doth excuse the Violation of the Law.

But now, on the other side, if in such an Instance as this we disobey Authority when it hath peremptorily laid its Commands upon us; we venture upon a much greater danger. For in that Case we run the hazard of transgressing a Plain Law of God; a Law of which no Man can or ought to be supposed Ignorant; and withal, a Law it is of such Importance and Consequence to Mankind, that we may truly say, the very being, as well as the Happiness of all Societies depend upon it.

Supposing now this to be a true Account of the hazard we run in Acting on one side or the other in our present Question, I leave it to any indifferent Person to judge, whether it be not much safer in such Circumstances as we here speak of, to obey our Lawful Superiours

with a Doubting Conscience, than to disobey them with a Doubting Conscience.

Fourthly, If there yet remain any Dispute in this Matter, let, if you please, our Saviour's Rule determine it, As ye would that Men should do unto you, even so do ye unto them. We desire no more favour for our Superiours, than this eternal Law of Equity will oblige us to.

If a Man will but be so impartial, as to pass the same Judgment in the Cause of Authority when he is a Subject, as he doth in his own Cause when he is a Superiour, we believe there would be presently an end of this Controversy.

For let Men talk as gravely as they please about the Danger of obeying the Publick Laws with a Doubting Conscience; Yet I dare appeal to themselves, whether they would not think it very unreasonable for any Domestick of theirs, over whom they have Lawful Authority, to live in Contradiction to the Private Rules and Orders of their Family, upon a Pretence of doubting whether those Orders were Lawful or no.

If a Parent, for Instance, should command his Son to sit uncovered before him; He would not take it for a good Answer from the Young Man, to say, Sir, I am doubtful whether it be not unlawful to use any such Ceremonies to Men, and therefore I pray excuse me,

if I do not pay you that Respect you require.

If a Master should order his Servant to provide Dinner for him on the Lord's Day; and he should reply, I would do it with all my heart, but that I am in doubt whether it be not forbidden by God's Word to do any Work on the Sabbath. I am not indeed perswaded that it is forbidden, but in the mean time I am not satisfied that it is Lawful, and therefore till I be resolved in this Point, I pray, Sir, be pleased to Pardon me.

Would now a Parent or a Master think these Answers Reasonable? Would he take them in such good part, as to think his Son or his Servant had done nothing but what they were bound to do in thus refusing to obey his Commands? No, I dare say he would not; but on the contrary would tell them, you are my Son or my Servant, and you must leave it to me to judge what is fit for me to command and for you to do. I will take care to command you nothing but what is lawful and justifiable: But in the mean time, you must not think by your foolish Doubts and Scruples (so long as you confess you know nothing unlawful in what I bid you do) to controul my Orders and Commands; that I think neither becomes you to do, nor me to suffer.

I dare say most Men would judge this a very fitting and just Reply in such a Case. And if so, it is a strong Argument, that we are all naturally apt to think that in purely Doubtful Cases, our Superiour is to be obeyed notwithstanding our Doubt, and that if in any Case we think otherwise, it is where our own Liberty and Interest are concerned, and where consequently we may be justly presumed unequal Judges, as being prejudiced in favour of ourselves.

Fifthly, Let me add this one Consideration more, and I have done. If in meerly Doubtful Cases, our Superiours have not a Power of Determining us; what will their Authority signifie? If it be not of weight enough when the Scales hang even to turn the Ballance; it is truly the lightest thing in the World; indeed it is worth nothing; and there will not be left Power enough in those that are to govern us, for the securing in any tolerable degree the Peace and Happiness of the Society they are to govern.

For I pray consider, What can there be so wisely Commanded, or Provided for, either in a Family, in a City, or in a Kingdom, but may be liable to exception, and become a Matter of Doubt to some Person or other?

There is nothing in the whole compass of indifferent things (and such chiefly are the Matters of Humane Laws) but some Person or other will be found to doubt whether it be fit or lawful. And if such a Doubt be a just Reason to deny Obedience to the Law or the Command, in what a Condition are all Families and Corporations, and Societies in the World? What will be the Consequence of such a Principle? Why certainly nothing but perpetual Jars, and Disturbances, and Confusions.

For Instance, If whenever a Prince declares War against his Enemies, it should be supposed Lawful for any Subject to withdraw his Assistance from his Sovereign in Case he doubts whether that War be a Lawful War or no; in what a sad Case would that Prince or that Kingdom be that is to be supported and protected upon these Terms? Every Man is hereby made a Judge of the Merits of a War; and though he be never so ignorant, never so unexperienced, never so unable to make a Judgment of these momentous Affairs of the Kingdom; yet if some Rumours or uncertain Stories have reached his Ears, that make him doubt whether this War was Lawfully begun or no; why, he is upon this Principle warranted to deny not only his Personal Service, but his Contributions towards the Charge of that War. But these Consequences are intolerable; and therefore the Principle from whence they flow, must needs be thought intolerable also.

III. Having

III. Having thus given the Reasons of our Assertion I come now in the Third Place to Answer the Arguments that are brought on the other side.

All the Arguments I have met with against the Doctrine we have been establishing, may be reduced to Three; and of those Three, the First I have prevented by my stating the Question; the Second I have already Answered in my Proofs of our Assertion; so that the Third only remains to be spoken to. However I will name the Two first.

The First Argument is drawn from the mischievous Consequences of our Doctrine. For, say they, If a Man should think himself obliged in every doubtful Case to be determined by the Command of his Superiours, it would be the ready way to involve him often times in most grievous Sins. As for Instance, if a Man should so halt between Two Opinions, as to doubt whether Jehovah or Baal was the true God, as the Israelites sometimes did; and at the same time (as it then happened among them) the Chief Ruler should command, that Baal should be worshipped: Why now in this Case (say they) according to your way of resolving Doubts, the Man must be obliged to worship an Idol, and to renounce the true God.

This is the Argument. But it is no Argument against us: Because in the stating

of our Question, we have excluded all such Doubts out of it, as do proceed from a Man's Gross and Criminal Ignorance of his Duty (as it is Apparent and Notorious that the Doubt in this Instance doth.) On the contrary, we are as forward to acknowledge as they, that if any Man do an Action that is plainly contradictory to the Laws of God, it is not his Ignorance, and much less his Doubtfulntfs, that will excuse him, though he do it in Obedience to his Governours. So that though this Argument would fall heavy enough upon those that plead for an Absolute Blind Obedience to Authority in all things indiscriminately, (which no Man of the Church of England doth :) Yet it doth not at all touch us, who only assert, That where we doubt equally, whether an Action be Lawful or no, and have used our best endeavours to satisfie ourselves how the Law of God stands as to that Matter, there the Command of our Superiours is to over-rule our Doubt.

But further, to shew what little Force there is in this Argument, which indeed hath made a great deal of noise; we will try whether it will not make as much against our Adversaries, if they will give us leave to put the Case, as it seems to make against us, when they put the Case.

Let us suppose therefore, as before, that an Israelite was very Doubtful, whether Jehovah or Baal was the true God: And let let us suppose likewise (as we reasonably may) that the King of Israel made a Law, that all the Temples and Altars of Baal should be Demolished, and that Jehovah only should be Worshipped. What Advice now would they give to the doubting Man in this Case? Will they say, that he must comply with the King's Laws, and Worship Jehovah only, while yet he is doubtful in his own Mind whether Baal be not the true God? Why this is against their own Principle, and gives away the Cause to us. But, will they then say, that while this Doubt remains, the Man must not obey Authority in Worshipping Jehovah only; but he must either Worship Baal and not Jehovah; or both Baal and Jehovah together; Why, this is indeed agreeable to their Principle; but then I appeal to my Reader, whether according to their way of resolving of Doubts, a Man is not as necessarily engaged in Idolatry, and other grievous Sins, as he is by our way.

So that you see this Argument concludes as strongly against them, as against us. But in Truth it concludes nothing either one way or other, but is wholly Foreign to the Question, as I shewed in my stating of it, whither I refer the Reader.

The Second Argument is drawn from the Limitations which God himself hath put to the Obedience we are to pay to our Governours, and it may be formed thus.

God hath not commanded us to obey our Superiours absolutely, and in all Things; but only in all such Things as are not contrary to his Law: So that where-ever we are uncertain whether the Commands of our Superiour be Lawful or no, we must at the same time be as much uncertain whether we be bound to obey: And if so, how can you say, that it is any more our Duty to obey them, than to disobey them in a Doubtful Case?

To this we Answer, That though we acknowledge that no Man is bound to obey his Superiours any farther than they command Lawful Things: Yet whenever it happens that they command such Things as we equally doubt whether they be Lawful or no; there are so many weighty Reasons to be given, why a Man should obey rather than disobey in that Case, as will perswade any Wise and Good Man to think it his Duty to obey. And for those Reasons I refer my Reader to the Five Particulars I before insisted on.

The Third and indeed the Principle Argument, is drawn from the Words of St. Paul in the 14th of the Romans, and the last verse, He that doubteth is Damned if he eat, because he eateth not of Faith; and whatsoever is not of Faith is Sin. From whence they thus Argue, If it was a Sin in those Christians that St. Paul speaks of, to eat any Food though in it self Lawful to be eaten, so long as they Doubted whether it was Lawful or no: Then, by parity of Reason, it must be a Sin to do any other Action, so long as we have a Doubt in our Minds concerning the Lawfulness of it; and if so, it is not the Magistrates commanding that Action, that will make it cease to be a Sin in us to do it.

This is the great Argument that is brought against our Point, and I shall give it a full and a just Discussion: Because, in Truth, if we come clearly off from this Text of St. Paul; not only all that is said against Obeying Authority with a Doubting Conscience will fall to the Ground; but likewise most of the Difficulties which entangle and perplex the Case of a Doubting Conscience in other Matters, will be in a great measure removed.

But before I enter upon a particular Discussion of this Text, with reference to our present Controversy, it will be needful to premise some General Account of it, for the sake of ordinary Readers; that so understanding before-hand the Case which the Apostle speaks to, and the meaning of the Expressions he here useth, they may be the better able to go along with us.

First, therefore, I shall give an Account of the Subject Matter of St. Paul's Discourse in this Chapter. II. Of What it meant by Doubting in this Text. III. What is meant by eating not of Faith. IV. What is meant by being Damned or Condemned for so doing.

First, As to the Subject Matter of St. Paul's Discourse in this Chapter, it is undoubtedly the Case of those Jewish Christians that were not so fully instructed in their Christian Liberty, but that they still believed all the Ceremonial Laws of Moses, concerning the Observation of Days, and the Difference of Meats, to be still in force, and to oblige their Conscience: Or at least they mightily doubted whether they did or not. So that whereas other Christians, who were better instructed, made no scruple of eating any kind of Food, though forbidden by the Law of Moses; these Men had great Reason to forbear such kind of Meats, because they were Perswaded, or at least it appeared more probable to them, than otherwise, that they were bound so to do.

That this was the Case of those that St. Paul here styles the weak Christians, appears from several Passages of this Chapter, nor I think is it much questioned by any. As for what is intimated in the Second Verse concerning their abstaining from Flesh altogether, and only eating Herbs; which would make one think that it was not purely their respect to the Law of Moses, but some other thing, which made them thus to put a difference between Meats; because by that Law they were no more tyed from Flesh (excepting only Swines Flesh and a few other Sorts) than they were from Herbs: St. Chrysostome hath well obviated

this difficulty, in the Account he gives of the Case of those Christians. ‘ There were ‘ (saith he) several of the Believing Jews, ‘ who taking themselves to be obliged in ‘ Conscience by the Law of Moses, even after ‘ their Christianity, did still retain the Ob‘ servation of Meats, not daring wholly to ‘ throw off the Yoak of the Law: These ‘ now, lest they should be found out, and ‘ reproached by the other Christians for ‘ thus abstaining from Swines-Flesh, and ‘ the like, upon account of Conscience;
 ‘ chose to eat no Flesh at all, but to feed
 ‘ altogether upon Herbs; that so this way ‘ of living of theirs, might pass rather for ‘ a kind of Fast or Religious Abstinence, than ‘ for a Legal Observance. Thus St. Chry- ‘ ostome; and to the same purpose Theodoret
 ‘ and Theophylact.

But if any one be not satisfied with this Account of that Business; but will further contend, that St. Paul here doth not only speak to the Case of Jewish Christians who were zealous for Moses’s Law; but also takes in the Case of some Gentile Christians at that Time, who (upon a Pythagorean Principle they might have entertained) were Averse to the eating any kind of Flesh; as thinking all such Food to be Unclean: They may, notwithstanding what I have said, enjoy their own Opinion. For it is indifferent to our Controversy, whether the Persons whose Case is here spoken to, were Jews or Gentiles. Only thus much appears plainly, that the most of them were Jewish Christians, who together with their Christianity, had a Conscientious Regard to the Law of Moses.

The word Secondly, As for what is meant by [Doubting] in the Text, the Reader may doth no where, either in Scripture or any other Author, signify to Doubt; but most usually to Discern, or Distinguish, or make a Difference, as to Doubt or Hesitate. And thus it is used both by Profane Writers, and in Holy Scripture; as particularly in the 22d of St. Jude's Epistle. And of some have Compassion, making a difference, [διακρίνομεν] the very Word in the Text.

rence, as it is frequently used in the New Testament, Vid. Mat. XVI. 3. Acts XV. 9. 1 Cor. IV. 7. VI. 5. XI. 29. The word [διακρίνομαι] is sometimes taken Actively, and then it hath the same Signification with [διακρίνω] i. e. to make a difference. As is plain not only in St. Jude's Text here quoted; but in St. James, Chap. II. 4. Where our English Translation hath indeed very well rendred the Apostle's Sense thus [Are ye not Partial] But if they had truly rendred his Words, they must have thus Translated [Do ye not make a difference?]

Again, sometimes it is taken Passively, and then the Signification of it is this, to be Divided, or Severed, or Distinguished. And when it is used in this Sense, it sometimes happens that the English word [Doubting] doth conveniently enough express it. Doubting, being indeed nothing else, but a Man's being Divided as to his own Mind. And accordingly in some Places our Translators have thus Englished it (though I believe in some of these, more proper Words might be found out to express its Sense.) But though in a Few Texts it be thus used in Scripture; yet I do not find that any Profane Author did ever use it in this Sense of Doubting. And therefore unless there be evident Reason, I do not know why we should depart from the natural and usual Signification of the Word in the Text we are now upon.

Now considering the Apostle's Argument in this Chapter is the Case of the Jewish Christians, who were divided in their Perswasions about the Legal Observations, some making a difference between clean and unclean Meats, and such like Things; and others making none; It seems every whit as proper and natural, and more suitable to the scope of the Place, to take the Word in this Sense in this Place, rather than in that other, according to which it is usually Translated. So that the Text is thus to be rendred, He that maketh a difference between clean and unclean Meats; If he do eat any thing which he judgeth to be unclean, he is Damned or Condemned for so doing, because he eateth not of Faith.

And so probable is this rendring, that our English Translators took care to put it in the Margin of our Bibles, as may be seen by every one. Nor doth it want good Authority; for the Vulgar Latin thus Translates the Place, and not only so, but Erasmus Hentenius, and generally all the Latin Expositors, if we may believe Estius, who yet himself Interprets it the Common way.

Indeed I doubt not but this is the true Version of this Word in this Text, However I do not so much stand upon it, as to preclude any Man from the liberty of taking the other if he likes it better. For though this way of rendring doth better serve our Purpose, (as quite putting an end to the Controversy :) Yet our Cause doth not so absolutely depend upon it, but that we may very well allow of the common Translation; as will appear hereafter.

Thirdly, As for the Word Faith, which is here used; let it be taken Notice of, that when in the Verse before the Text, the Apostle speaks of having Faith; and in the Text, of eating without Faith, or not of Faith: and that, whatsoever is not of Faith, is Sin: We are not to take Faith here in the large Sense, as it signifies a Belief in Jesus Christ, or an Assent to God's Revelations, particularly those of the Gospel; which is the usual Notion of Faith in the New Testament: But only for a Man's Assent to the Goodness or Lawfulness of any particular Action that he takes in Hand.

So that to have Faith about an Action, is to be perswaded that that Action may be Lawfully done in the present Circumstances, or at least not to be Conscious of any Reason that should make it Unlawful. And, on the other side, to do an Action without Faith or not of Faith, as the Apostle here expresseth it, is to do an Action of the Lawfulness of which we are no way satisfied, but, on the contrary, think we have good Reason to believe that it is an unlawful Action.

Fourthly, Whereas St. Paul saith, that he that doubteth or differenceth, is damned or Con-

Condemned, if he eat; we are to take Notice, that that Expression is not to be understood of the Punishment of his eating in the other World, (which is that which in common Speech we call Damnation;) But only of the guilt of his eating as to his own Conscience. Indeed there is no colour why our Translators should here use the Word [Damned] since [Condemned] is the natural Word, whether we consider the Propriety of the Greek or the English Language: So that this is the meaning of the Proposition. He that doubteth (with such a Doubt as is here spoken of) and yet eateth; such a Man is Condemned for so doing. Condemned; how? why Condemned of himself, (as the Apostle had expressed it in the Verse before,) Condemned of his own Conscience, because without Necessity, having free Power over his own Actions, he doth that which he apprehends to be Sinful.

I dare say, the Reader will be satisfied of the Truth of our Interpretation, as to both the last named Particulars, if he will carefully Read the foregoing Verse together with the Text (as indeed they do but both make one compleat Sentence) and judge of one by the other.

St. Paul hath for a good while been addressing himself to the stronger Christians, in order to the Perswading them so to use their Knowledge and their Christian Liberty, that they might edifie the Weak Brethren among them, but in no Wife give Scandal to any of them; and he thus concludes his Advice in this Chapter.

Hast thou Faith? have it to thy self before God. Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth: But he that doubteth (or maketh a difference) is condemned if he eat, because he eateth not of Faith, and whatsoever is not of Faith, is Sin.

I dare appeal to any indifferent Person, that hath read St. Paul's foregoing Discourse in this Chapter, whether the meaning of this whole Passage be not to this Effect.

Art thou so well instructed in thy Religion, as to be perswaded that the Gospel hath taken away all difference of Meats, and that thou mayest Lawfully eat of any Food that is set before thee? why, it is very well for thee; but then, be content that thou art thus perswaded, and do not upon every Occasion make such an Ostentation of thy Faith in this Matter, nor despise others that have it not; as to lay a Snare before thy Weak and Uninstructed Brethren, who are of another Perswasion, to Sin against their Conscience, by Acting as thou dost. It is sufficient for thee that God seeth thy Faith, and that thou canst justifie thy eating to thy own Conscience. For I can assure thee,

it is no small Happiness for a Man to be able to satisfy his own Conscience in that Action which he takes in Hand.

[This is undoubtedly the meaning of that Expression, Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he approveth. That is, it is a great Comfort to a Man that his Conscience doth not condemn him in that Action which he thinks fit to do. In ea re quam agendum suscipit, saith Grotius; In eo quod agendam elegit, saith Estius; En ce qu'il veut faire, saith the late excellent French Translation. And it is just the same thing that St. John saith in other Words. Eph. I. 3, 21. My Brethren, if our own Hearts (i. e. our Conscience) condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God.]

But then, (as the Apostle goes on) as to those that are so uninstructed in the Nature of Christianity, as still to make a difference between clean and unclean Meats; as it infinitely concerns them to have a care what they do; so it concerns thee likewise to have a care how thou layest a stumbling Block before them. For in what a Condition would any of them be, if being tempted by thy Insolent Carriage, and Unreasonable Example, he should through Fear or base Compliance venture to eat such Things as he judgeth to be unclean? Why, certainly he is both an ill and a miserable Man for so doing; because he is condemned of his own Conscience. For he eats not only without being convinced of the Lawfulness of his eating, but presuming the contrary, and whatever is thus done against Conscience, must needs be a Sin. This I take to be the true Meaning of this whole Passage, for which, if need was, we might produce several Authorities, particularly that of St. Chrysofome, who gives much the same Account of it.

Having thus given an Account of the Text, as it lies in the Chapter, and with relation to the Business that St. Paul had there in hand; I now come to consider it with reference to our present Controversy with the Dissenters, and to take off the Argument they bring from it, against the Position we are now contending for.

Their Argument, as I said, is this.

St. Paul here affirms, That whosoever Doubteth about the Lawfulness of any particular Meat, and while that Doubt remaineth, eateth of that Meat, such a Man Sins, and is Condemned for so doing; because he eateth not of Faith. If now it be so in this particular Case, it must be so in all other Doubtful Cases; and consequently in the Case of Obeying Authority, where a Man Doubts of the Lawfulness of the thing enjoined: That is to say, whosoever, in any Case whatsoever, doth doth an Action of the Lawfulness of which he Doubts; he Sins and is Condemned for so doing, because he Acteth not of Faith.

This is the Argument fairly put, and I shall now endeavour as fairly to Answer it.

And first of all, I say, This Argument proceeds upon a false Ground. For it supposeth St. Paul in this Text to speak to the Case of a purely Doubting Conscience, (which is the Subject of our present Controversy:) Whereas it may be made to appear with good Evidence, that it is the Case of a resolved Conscience only, that he here Treats of. So that this Text is wholly misapplied by the Dissenters, and makes Nothing at all to the Business. For though there be indeed in this Text a very severe Censure of all those that Act against any kind of Perswasion; yet there is nothing here said that toucheth a Man's Acting Doubtingly, either one way or other.

That this is true, appears from the Account I have before given of the Subject Matter of the Apostle's Discourse in this Chapter; which is, the Case of those Christians who were not barely Doubtful and Wavering in their own Minds, whether they might Lawfully eat of such Meats as were then Disputed: But were Perswaded they ought not; as believing that the Law of Moses, which had declared clared them Unclean, was still in Force; or else believing them to be Unclean in themselves.

That this was indeed the Case here discussed, seems very clear from the 2d and 5th Verses of this Chapter, where the Apostle states it; and more particularly from the 14th Verse, where he gives a summary Resolution of it; and in my Judgment the very same Resolution that he doth in the Text. I know (saith he) and am perswaded that there is nothing unclean of itself; but to him that esteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean. So that it seems the Person whose Case St. Paul speaks to, was not uncertain or unresolved, whether the Meats under Deliberation were clean or unclean; but he was perswaded they were unclean, he esteemed them to be such, and he must of necessity do so, so long as he believed the Law of Moses to be in Force, as by all that appears in this Chapter he did believe.

But may some say, If this was the Case, why then doth St. Paul use the Word Doubting in the Text? To Doubt of the unlawfulness of an Action, is quite another thing, than to be Perswaded of the unlawfulness of it.

In Answer to this, I refer my Reader to the Account I have before given of the Word [διακρίνωμεν &c.] which may as properly be rendred, He that maketh a difference between Meats; as he that Doubteth eth about Meats. Now if this Version be admitted, the ground of this Objection is quite taken away. And I see no reason why it should not be admitted, since (as I said) it is as natural as the other, and withal, it makes the Apostle's Sense to run more coherently with what he had said before.

But further, Let if you please the common Translation be retained; let the Text be interpreted of one that Doubteth, and not of one that maketh a difference: Yet still this will make nothing against what we have now said. For it is undeniably plain, that what St. Paul here calls Doubting is in our way of speaking a degree of Perswasion. My meaning is this; The Doubting which St. Paul here speaks of, is not that where a Man's Judgment is suspended, upon account of the equal Probabilities on both sides of the Question, which is the proper Notion of Doubting, and that which we are now concerned with: But he speaks of a Doubt strengthened with so many Probabilities, that it wanted but very little of a Perswasion; or, to speak more properly, it was a real Perswasion, though with some mixture of Doubtfulness in it: That is to say, the Man had so strong Convictions of the Unlawfulness of eating on the one Hand, and so little Satisfaction about the Lawfulness of it on the other; that if he was not fully perswaded that it was a Sin to eat; yet it appeared by many degrees more probable to him that it was a Sin, than that it was not.

That this now was the Case, is evident beyond all exception, from the Words that follow. He that doubteth (saith the Text) is condemned if he eat, that is, Condemned of his own Conscience, as I shewed before. Now how could that be, if the Man was not in some degree perswaded that his eating was unlawful? It is certain no Man can be further Condemned of his own Conscience for doing any Action, than he doth believe that Action to be forbidden by some Law of God. To say, therefore, that a Man is Condemned of his own Conscience for eating, must of Necessity imply, that he doth believe his eating to be unlawful, and if so, it is certain he doth more than simply doubt whether it be lawful or no.

Well, but doth not the Apostle say, in this very Chapter, Let every one be fully perswaded in his own Mind? What is the meaning of that, but that every one should assure himself that the Action he takes in Hand is a lawful Action, or else he doth not Act with a safe Conscience? And is not that the very same thing that is here said, He that Doubteth is Condemned if he eat; because he eateth not of Faith, or with a full Perswasion? There is therefore good Reason why we should Interpret

this Text in the proper Sense of Doubting; the Apostle himself directing us so to do by this Passage.

This is the most considerable Objection that can be made against our way of Expounding this Text, and probably it was with a respect to that Passage that so many Interpreters have Translated it as they have done; but whether they had any just Reason from thence so to do, is the Question. Or rather I think it will be no Question with any one who attends either to the Design, or the Words of the Apostle in that Passage.

The Passage is in the 5th *Vers*e of this Chapter, where the Apostle is giving an Account of the State of the present Controversy. One Man (saith he) esteemeth one Day above another, another Man esteemeth every Day alike: Let every Man be fully perswaded in his own Mind. So we render it; but how truly, I shall now Examine.

It cannot well be conceived by the coming in of these Words, that St. Paul had any such thing in his Mind when he Wrote them, as we would now make them to express. It was certainly none of his Business in this Place, to oblige the contending Parties to get full Perswasions in their several Ways, and then all would be right, for there was too much of that already amongst them. Neither was it his meaning here to tell them, that if in any Case they acted without a full Perswasion of the Lawfulness of the Action, they Sinned against Conscience; for besides that this is certainly false, it was nothing at all to his Purpose.

But this was that which he design'd in this Passage, to perswade both the contending Parties quietly to permit each other to enjoy their several Opinions and Perswasions (in those little Matters, which did no way concern their Duty,) without Censuring or Judging one another.

This now is a Meaning that perfectly suits with all the other good Advice he gives them in this Chapter, and this Meaning he doth express in as apt Words as can be thought on. One Man esteemeth one Day above another, another Man esteemeth every Day alike. Let every Man be filled with his own Mind. Or, satisfied with his own Perswasion. The Original Words are [Ἐκαστος ἐν τῷ ἰδίῳ νοί (or τῷ ἰδίῳ νοί (without the Preposition, as is read in some good Copies) πληροφροσέσθω.] Which, saith Grotius, is an Hebrew way of Expression, and signifies no more than this, Quisq; fruatur sua Sententia; Let every Man enjoy his own Opinion: Or, as the Vulgar Latin most properly Translates, Unusquisq; in suo sensu abundet. i. e. Let every one abound in his own Sense: Or lastly, as the Commentaries that go under the Name of St. Ambrose, Unusquisq; remittatur suis suis Consiliis. Let every one be left to his own Counsels. And to the same Sense also both St. Chrysostome and Theoderet do expound this Passage. This Interpretation, though it be very different from that in our English Bible, yet expresseth the Signification of the Original Text as well as that, and withal, hath better Authority to recommend it: But that which we chiefly stand upon, is, that the Subject Matter, and the Scope of the Apostle doth necessarily require this Interpretation.

For, in Truth, If this Passage be rendred the common way, so as that it shall import, that every Man, in every Case, is to be fully perswaded in his own Mind, I do not know how the Precept here given, can be supposed to be either Reasonable or Possible: It is certainly no more in every Man's Power to be satisfied about all his Doubts, than it is to believe or disbelieve what he pleases. When there appears Reason of Doubting, it is in vain to command a Man not to Doubt. Nay, it is as much a Man's Duty to Doubt, and to keep his Judgment in suspense, when the weight of Probability is on both sides equal, as it is to believe or to disbelieve upon clear Evidence. Or rather in that Case a Man cannot chuse but Doubt. He cannot reasonably, nay, he cannot possibly do otherwise:

I think, by what hath been said, it doth plainly appear, that this Text of St. Paul we are upon, [viz. He that Doubteth is Condemned if he eat] hath nothing to do with a Doubting Conscience in our Sense; but only with a resolved one; and consequently, that the Argument which is brought from hence against our Assertion, is nothing at all to the Purpose, because it is grounded upon a false Exposition of the Text.

But though this is (as I think) the true Answer to this Argument; and the Answer indeed which I mainly stand upon; yet there is another Answer given to it by the Casuits; which, because it is the Answer that our Learned Bishop Sanderson, thought fit to pitch upon, I ought not to pass it by without Mention, nor, if I can, without some Improvement.

I must confess, if we do admit this Answer, the Authority and Obligation of a Doubting Conscience will be set higher than I do in this Discourse suppose it: But however, it may be a good Answer to the Dissenters; because it unties the Difficulty upon their own Principles: The Answer is this.

2. In the Second Place, allowing that the Man whose Case St. Paul speaks to in this Text, was really a Doubting Person, and not one that was Perswaded (as we have hitherto supposed:) Yet it doth by no means follow, that, because this Man was guilty of Sin, and Condemned for eating those Meats, of the Lawfulness of which he Doubted: Therefore a Man that Obeys Authority in an Instance where he Doubts of the Lawfulness of the Command; that such a Man Sins and is Condemned for so doing; this, I say, doth not at all follow.

For there is a vast Disparity in the Cases; and to argue from one to the other, is to argue from a Particular to an Universal, or from one Particular to another, without respect to the different Circumstances of each Case; which is against all the Rules of Logick.

If St. Paul had said [He that Doubteth is Damned if he Act] there had been some pretence for making his Sentence an universal Proposition, so as to extend to all Doubting Men in all Cases: But now only saying, [He that Doubteth is Damned if he eat] it shews that he only spoke to the Particular Case that was before him; and that other Cases are no farther concerned in his Proposition, than as they do agree in Circumstances with the Case he there speaks to.

Now the Case the Apostle there treats of, and That which we are now concerned about, are so far from any way agreeing in the main Circumstances, by which a Man is to measure the Goodness or the Badness of an Action, that there cannot be Two Doubtful Cases put, that are more different, as I shall now shew.

If St. Paul do at all here speak to the Case of a Doubting Man; he speaks of one that Acted Doubtingly in a Matter where it was in his own Power to Act without a Doubt: that is, He was in such Circumstances, that he knew he might certainly without Sin refuse to eat those Meats concerning which he Doubted; for there was no colour of Obligation upon him to eat them: But yet in this Case, where he was perfectly at Liberty to let alone; for the serving some evil unwarrentable Ends, he would not chuse that side which was safe, and where he need fear no Sin, which was to forbear; but would chuse that side that was Doubtful; that is, would run a needless hazard of transgressing some Law of God. It is of such a Man, and in such a Case as this, that St. Paul speaks, when he saith, He that Doubteth is Condemned if he eat: Supposing indeed that his Words are at all to be Expounded in this Sense.

But now because it is thus in this Case (and in all such like, if you please:) Doth it therefore follow from these Words, that a Man that is in other Circumstances; that is not at Liberty to chuse his own Way; as not being at his own disposal, but under the Direction and Government of Authority: That this Man Sins and is Condemned if he obey the Orders of his Superiours, when he is Doubtful of the Lawfulness of the thing in which he expresseth his Obedience? No, by no means. For this Case hath a quite different Consideration.

In the former Case there was only danger on one side, and that was in Acting; and the Man might forbear if he pleased, and that without any danger: But in the other Case there is danger on both sides, and the Man runs at least as great a hazard in forbearing the Action, (nay, we say, a much greater,) as if he should do it.

So that undeniably (unless we will make one Rule to serve for all Cases, though never so different, which is the absurdest thing in the World;) for any thing that St. Paul hath here said to the contrary; this latter Man may not only without Sin do the thing he Doubts of; but is bound to do it. Whereas, if the other Man spoken of in the Text, should do the Action he doubts of, it might be a Sin in him.

But further, That St. Paul meant not to extend his Proposition to all Doubtful Cases, but only to such Cases as he here treats of; is pretty evident from the Reason that he gives, why he that eateth Doubtingly Sins in so doing; viz. Because he eateth not of Faith.

A Discourse concerning

He doth not say, He that Doubteth is Condemned if he eat, because he eateth with a Doubting Conscience. If he had said so, I grant the Reason of his Proposition would have reached all Doubting Men in all Cases; but this is that which he saith, He that Doubteth is Condemned if he eat, because he eateth not of Faith.

So that if there be any Doubtful Cases wherein a Man may Act with Faith notwithstanding his Doubt; I hope it will be allowed, that those Cases are excepted out of St. Paul's Proposition.

Now, that there are such Cases; and that our Case of Obeying Authority is one of them, I thus prove.

Whosoever so Acts, as that he is satisfied in his own Mind, that what he doth is according to his Duty in the present Circumstances; such a Man Acts with Faith in Reference to that Action. This is evident from the very Notion of Faith, as it is here spoken of, of which I have before given an Account.

But now it is very possible, that a Man may have a Doubt concerning the Lawfulness of an Action, and yet be in such Circumstances, as that he shall be satisfied that is very reasonable and agreeable to his Duty, nay, (as the Case may be) that he is really bound to do that Action concerning which he thus Doubts, rather than not to do it: Because the not doing that Action,

Action, all Things considered, appears to him more dangerous, or attended with worse Consequences.

This now being granted, it undeniably follows; That where-ever a Man lights into these Circumstances, he is not a Sinner, even according to the strictest Sense of these Words though he Act with some kind of Doubt, because he Acts in Faith; That is, he is resolved in his own Conscience, that thus it behoveth him to act in the present Case, and that it would be unreasonable or Sinful to act otherwise.

So that let our Adversaries make the most of St. Paul's Words that they can, it is a very Illogical Inference, to say, That whoever Acts with a Doubt upon his Conscience in any Case, is guilty of Sin; and much more is it so, to affirm it in our present Case of Obeying Authority. For it is certain, that many Men are (and I believe all Men may be) satisfied, that in a purely doubtful Case, it is not only more reasonable, but their Duty to Obey their Superiours.

Well, But it will be said, Do not we here talk Contradictions? Can a Man have Faith about an Action, that is, be resolved in his own Conscience that such an Action is to be done, or may Lawfully be done, and yet doubt concerning it at the same Time.

A Discourse concerning

I Answer, This is so far from being a Contradiction, that it is a Case that every Day happens, where a Man hath a Doubt on both sides, as it is in the Instance before us. A Man often hath very great Doubts of the Lawfulness of this or the other Action, when he considers the Action in general: But yet when he comes to weigh the Circumstances he is in, and the Reasons he hath in those Circumstances for the doing the Action; he may be perswaded, that it is better for him to do the Action, than to let it alone, notwithstanding all the Doubts he hath about it: that is, Though he doubt of the Lawfulness of the Action it self, considered without his present Circumstances; yet as it comes Circumstantiated to him, he doth not doubt but it may be Lawfully done by him. But of this I have spoke largely before, in my Explication of the Rule of a Doubting Conscience.

But is not all Doubting contrary to Faith? I Answer, No, it is not: For such kind of Doubting as we here speak of, doth, we see, very well consist with Faith. My meaning is, it is not necessary, in order to a Man's having Faith about an Action, that all his Doubts concerning that Action should be destroyed; it is abundantly sufficient that they be over-ballanced.

That

That which I would say, is this. Where-ever a Man hath such a degree of Perswasion touching any Action he is deliberating about, that he believes it more advisable to a reasonable Man, all Things considered, to do that Action, than to forbear it; such a Man hath all the Faith that is needful to the doing that Action with a safe Conscience; though in the mean Time he may have such Doubts concerning that Action, as will perhaps be too hard for him to resolve, and will create him likewise some trouble and uneasiness in the doing of it. Though indeed, to speak properly, I think these ought not any longer to be called Doubts, after they are thus over-ruled or over-balanced; but rather to go under the Name and Notion of pure Scruples, which the Casuists of all Perswasions do not only allow, but advise that a Man should act against.

In plain English, That Doubtfulness about an Action which St. Paul speaks of, and which he Censures as a Sin, was such a Doubtfulness, as after the Action was done, rendered the Man Self-condemned; his Conscience could not but reproach him for doing as he did: But now in our Case, the Man is not at all Self-condemned, because he hath the Testimony of his Conscience that he hath acted according to the best of his Judgment and Discretion.

tion. Though he acts with a Doubt, yet he is satisfied he hath made the most reasonable Choice that he could in his Circumstances. And where-ever a Man doth so, he both Acts in Faith, and without any danger of Condemnation from his own Conscience.

So that after all the Buffle that is made about doing or forbearing an Action with a Doubting Conscience; you see there is no great intricacy in the Case, nor any necessity of Sinning on both Hands, always supposing a Man to be Sincere and Honest. For if he be really so, he will always do that which he judges most according to his Duty, or at least, that which he judges to be consistent with it; and where-ever a Man doth thus, it is certain he Acts with a safe Conscience, notwithstanding any Doubt he may have about the Action. Because more than the former a Man cannot do, and more than the latter he is not bound to do.

As for what Sins an Erroneous Conscience may ingage a Man in; or what troublesome Reflections a Melancholly Imagination may occasion to him in these Cases; I am not to Answer for them, they are of another Consideration.

IV. Having thus largely treated of the Nature of a Doubting Conscience, and of the Rules by which a Man is to Act, whenever it happens; and that, both when he is left at his own Liberty, and when he is under the Commands of others: All that remains to be done, is to speak something about the Authority or Obligation of a Doubting Conscience; which is our Fourth and last General Head.

is

But in Truth the Discussion of this might very well be spared, after what I have said relating to this Argument in several Places of the foregoing Discourse, particularly under my last Head. However I shall endeavour to give some Account of this Point; though I intend it a very short one, because, indeed what I have to offer is not so much any new Matter, as an Application of the Principles I have before laid down to our present Purpose.

The Point in Question is concerning the Authority of a Doubting Conscience: Or, Whether a Doubting Conscience doth bind at all, and how far?

In Answer to this, I say in General; It is certain that a Doubting Conscience of itself lays no Obligation at all upon a Man any way: Indeed it is a kind of Contradiction to suppose that it should.

For, I pray, What is the Notion of a Doubting Conscience, but this, That a Man is uncertain or unresolved in his Mind, whether as to this particular Action he be bound or not bound? To suppose now, that a Man is obliged in Conscience either way,

way, by virtue of this Doubt; is plainly to suppose, that a Man takes himself to be bound, while yet at the same time he is disputing with himself whether he be bound or no.

To speak this plainer if I can: Since Conscience, as I have often said, is nothing else but a Man's Judgment concerning Actions, whether they be Duties or Sins, or indifferent: And since the Law of God Commanding or Forbidding Actions; or neither Commanding or Forbidding them; is the only Rule by which a Man can judge what Actions are Duties; and what are Sins, and what are Indifferent: It plainly follows, that a Man cannot be bound in Conscience to do any Action, which it doth not appear to him, that God's Law hath some way or other Commanded; and made a Duty; or to Forbear any Action which he is not convinced in his Judgment, that God's Law hath some where or other Forbidden, and so made a Sin. And therefore, since in a Case where a Man is purely Doubtful, he cannot be supposed to have any such Convictions that the Law of God doth either Command or Forbid the Action Doubted of (for if he had, he would no longer Doubt;) It follows likewise by undeniable Consequence, that a Man's Conscience is not bound on either side of the Action, but he may either do it or forbear it with a safe Conscience.

So that if there be any Obligation at all upon a Man to Act thus, rather than otherwise in a Doubtful Case; that Obligation must arise upon one of these two Accounts, viz. Either there is some Law of God concerning a Doubting Conscience which hath tied a Man up to such precise Measures of Acting: Or, at least a Man hath a Perswasion, that there is some such Law of God.

Now I grant, That in both these Cases, there doth a direct Obligation pass upon the Man's Conscience: But then it is to be remembred, that this Obligation doth not arise from the Man's being Doubtful in his Conscience; but from his being resolved in his Conscience: That is to say, if there be really any such Law of God; it is the Obligation of a Right Conscience: Or if there be not, but the Man only judges that there is; it is then the Obligation of an Erroneous Conscience: But as for the Obligation of a Doubting Conscience there is no such thing.

The great, therefore, or indeed the only Point that is to be inquired into, in order to the Resolution of our present Question, is this. Whether there be any Law of God which doth determine our Actions one way or other, in the Case of a Doubt; and what that Law is?

Now in Answer to this Inquiry, I say, That it doth not appear that there is any express

expres Law of God in Holy Scripture, that hath laid any Obligation upon us as to this particular of a Doubting Conscience, either one way or other.

The only Texts that I know of, which are thought to make for this purpose, are the Two Passages in the 14th of the Romans, which I have before largely given an Account of, viz. That in the 5th Verse, Let every Man be fully perswaded in his own Mind. And that other in the last Verse, He that Doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of Faith. But now I think I have made it plain, by several Arguments, that these Texts do not at all concern our present Case of a Doubting Conscience, properly so called.

So that there being no expres Particular Law of God in Scripture, about acting with a Doubting Conscience, we seem to be left as to that Affair, to the General Laws of God, as they are declared, whether by Nature or Scripture.

Now the most that any Man can be Obliged to by the General Laws of God, whether Natural or Revealed, in the Case of a Doubt, is only these Two Things. First, to use his Endeavour to get himself as well instructed in his Duty, as his Circumstances and Opportunities will allow him. And Secondly, where he is at a loss for Information in that Case, to act as reasonably as he can.

I do not say, that a Man in every Doubtful Case that happens, is strictly obliged to thus much. But I say, it is impossible he should be obliged to more. Because indeed more than this he cannot do; and no Man can be obliged to more than is in his Power.

Where-ever therefore a Man in a Doubtful Case takes care to observe these Two Things, he Acts with a safe Conscience, however he may act Doubtingly in that Case.

Thus far I think we are clear beyond Exception. But it may be, some will not be satisfied with this Account of our Point, but will be putting a farther Question.

We have before laid down several Rules about a Man's Acting in a Doubtful Case, the Sum of all which comes to no more than what we have now said, viz. That in every doubtful Case a Man is to act as reasonably as he can. The Question now is, Whether a Man is strictly bound in Conscience always to follow this Rule? Or, which is to the same effect, Whether a Man in a Matter concerning which he hath only a pure Doubt, may not without Sin indifferently chuse either side of the Action, though yet perhaps one side doth appear to him more reasonable or more safe than the other?

This Question is indeed more curious than useful. But however, since it properly falls under the Argument we are now treating of, and tends somewhat to the clearing of it; I shall venture to say something to it. Only I declare before-hand, that I mean not in what I shall say, to assert any thing Dogmatically, but only to propose, in order to further Examination: And withal, that whether that which we say be True or False; it doth not at all affect the Merits of the main Cause we have undertaken.

That now which I have to say to this Question, is this. That though it be eternally fit and natural, and conducing to a Man's Happiness both in this World and the other, that he should in all Cases, and especially in Doubtful Cases, govern his Actions by the best Reason that he hath (and certainly the Wiser and the Better any Man is, the more steadily will he pursue this Rule:) Yet, on the other hand, I dare not say, that a Man is strictly bound in Conscience so to do; so as that he is properly guilty of Sin if he do not.

My Reason is this; Because there is no Law of God which doth oblige us in all Cases, to do that which is Best: And if we be not bound to do always that which is Best, we are not bound to do always that which is most Reasonable; for certainly, that which is Best, is always most Reasonable: And if we be not bound to do that which is most Reasonable, much less

are we bound to do that which is Safest; because that which is Safest, is not always either Best or most Reasonable. And if there be no Law of God that doth oblige us to any of these Things; then it is certain we do not Sin if we Act otherwise, For where there is no Law, there is no Transgression.

Now, That the first of these Principles is True, we have as good Proof as can be desired, viz. the Authority of St. Paul; who hath in the 7th of the First of the Corinthians thus determined: And if that be true, the other Two must needs be so likewise, because they follow from it by unavoidable Consequence.

Taking now this for granted. I ask, what Law doth a Man Transgress, that in a purely Doubtful Case, chuseth either side indifferently, without respect to what is Safest or most Reasonable: Always supposing that the side he chuseth, be not in itself evil and forbidden by God. I say, according to these Principles he transgresseth no Law at all, and consequently cannot properly be said to Sin at all.

If the Man be at all guilty, it is upon one of these Accounts, viz. either because he Acteth against the dictate of his Conscience, or because he Acteth against the Law of God, in preferring that which is less reasonable and safe, before that which is more so.

Now, Upon the former account he is not at all guilty, for his Conscience hath passed no Dictate, no Verdict in this Matter, and therefore he cannot be supposed to Act against any such Dictate or Verdict: The Man is in such a State that he either believes he may Act as he doth, without Violation of his Duty: Or, at least he hath no belief to the contrary; so that his Conscience doth not any way Condemn him.

And as for the other thing, of his not chusing that side of the Doubtful Case which appeared to him most reasonable; it is true, if there was any Law of God which obliged him to make such a Choice, he would be guilty of Sin if he chose otherwise. But now it doth not appear, that there is any such Law of God. Nay, so far from that, that it appears from St. Paul, that there is no such Law, but that every Man is left to his own Liberty in this Matter; always supposing that he take care not to chuse, or do any thing that he judgeth to be inconsistent with his Duty; which in our Case we do likewise suppose.

But then having said this, we must add further. That though we here have concluded, that no Man, in a Doubtful Case, properly so called, is strictly obliged by any Law of God, under the Penalty of Sin, to chuse one side

more than another, but may indifferently chuse either.

Yet in the First Place, Whoever doth believe, or is perswaded in his own Mind, either that he ought not at all to Act against a Doubt, or that in every Doubtful Case he is bound to follow the safer side, such a Man, so long as he so believes, cannot without Sin Act according to the Principles we have now laid down.

And Secondly, We are far from encouraging any Man to Act thus Hand over Head in a Doubtful Case; much less from commending him for so doing. For though we say, that, strictly speaking, a Man doth not Sin which way soever he Act in a purely Doubtful Case; yet on the other hand, I think he is but in a low Dispensation as to Vertue and Goodness, that never looks further into his Actions, nor takes more care about them, than only that they be not directly Sinful.

He that is heartily Good, will with St. Paul, not only consider what Things are Lawful, but what Things are Expedient and do Edifie.

It will not ordinarily be sufficient to ingage such a Man in an Action, to satisfy him, that he may do that Action, without transgressing any Law of God: But he will examine whether the doing or forbearing the Action doth more serve the ends of Vertue and Charity. And accordingly as that appears to him; so will he determine his Choice.

In a Word, The Better and the more Vertuous any Man is, the more delicate and tender Sense will he have, not only of that which the Law of God hath precisely made his Duty, and so in a proper Sense doth oblige his Conscience; but also of every thing that is Reasonable and Excellent and Praise-worthy: So that it will really grate upon his Mind, to do many Things, which in strict speaking, cannot be accounted unlawful or forbidden.

And thus it is in our present Case. If we suppose a Man to be a Devout Christian, and a sincere Lover of God, he will not be able to prevail with himself, in a Case where he Doubteth, to chuse either side indiscriminately (though if he should, I do not know, as I said before, what Law of God he transgresseth:) but he will weigh and consider the Reasons on both sides; and that which appears to him, after such Consideration, to be most reasonable and conducing to God's Glory, and his own, and the World's Good, that shall have the preference.

To come to a Conclusion. The Sum of what I have now said, is this. As Conscience is the immediate Guide of our Actions; So the Rule by which Conscience itself is to be guided, is the Law of God, and nothing else.

Though

Though therefore we cannot be safe in following our Conscience, where our Conscience is not guided by the Law of God, (because, as I have often said, our false Judgment of Things doth not cancel our Obligation to Act according to what the Laws of God require of us; unless we can justly plead unblameable Ignorance of those Laws:)

Yet, on the other hand, where-ever Conscience tells us, that we must do this Action, because the Law of God hath commanded it; we must do it, or we Sin.

And again, Where-ever Conscience tells us, that we must avoid this Action, because the Law of God hath forbidden it, we must forbear that Action, or we Sin.

But if Conscience cannot say, that this Action is commanded or forbidden; there we are not tyed under the penalty of Sinning, either to do or to forbear that Action.

But yet if a Man's Conscience should thus suggest to him; Though I cannot say directly that this Action is a Duty, or that it is a Sin, because I am at a loss how the Law of God stands as to this Matter, and consequently, I cannot lay any direct Obligation upon you either way; yet my Advice is, that you would chuse this way, rather than the other: For this way, all Things considered, appears most fit and reasonable to be chosen; for there is more Probability that this is the right way than the other: or there is less harm, though you should be mistaken, in going this way then the other: Now in this Case, though a Man be not properly obliged under the Guilt of Sin to obey his Conscience, because Conscience doth not propose the Choice to him under that Condition, yet if he be a wise and a good Man, he will undoubtedly chuse that side which Conscience, all Things considered, hath represented to him to be the most fit and reasonable to be chosen.

And thus much concerning our Fourth and last General Head.

Thus I have largely Discussed the Case of a Doubting Conscience in General, and Answered all the Considerable Enquiries that can be made about it. I am not sensible that I have left any material Difficulty in this Argument untouched; though I am very sensible I have said a great deal more than needed, in order to the Resolution of that Case, for the sake of which, I undertook this Discourse. But I Intended such a Discussion of this Argument, as would serve for all other Cases as well as that.

I do not know whether it be needful to make a particular Application of what I have said upon a Doubting Conscience to the Case of our present Dissenters. However, it will not be amiss if I offer something towards it; if it be but to save the Reader who is concerned in that Case the Labour and Trouble of doing it.

The Case which I am to speak to is briefly this: There are several Persons that are unsatisfied about the Lawfulness of our Communion, as it is established and enjoined; and that, upon several Accounts. Some perhaps Doubt of the Lawfulness of all Forms of Prayer. Others about the Lawfulness of our Form. Others Doubt about the Lawfulness of our Ceremonies, or our way of Administring the Sacrament: And others it may be about other Things. None of them can indeed say, that any of these Things do go against their Conscience, or that they believe the use of them to be unlawful: For that is the Case of a Resolved Conscience, with which we have nothing here to do: But they are undetermined and uncertain whether they be Lawful or no; and so long as they continue under this Suspence of Judgment, they dare not joyn in our Worship; fearing they would Sin against God if they should.

Now of those that thus Doubt there may be Two Sorts.

There are some perhaps that have only a Single Doubt in this Matter; that is to say, They make a Doubt whether they may Lawfully joyn with us, so long as those suspected Conditions are required of them: But they make no Doubt, but are very well satisfied, that they may Lawfully Separate from us.

Again,

A Discourse concerning

Again, there are others that Doubt on both sides as they have good Reason to do. That is, As they Doubt on one hand, whether the Terms of our Communion be not Sinful: So they Doubt on the other hand, whether it be not Sinful to Separate upon account of those Terms.

Now of these likewise; there may be Two Sorts.

Some perhaps are equally Doubtful whether the Terms of our Communion be Lawful or no.

Others Doubt unequally; that is, are more inclined to believe that they are Sinful, than that they are Lawful.

That now which is to be enquired into is; What is most Reasonable and Advisable in Point of Conscience to be done in each of these Cases.

Now as to the First of these Cases, where a Man hath only a Doubt on one side, and that is, Whether he may Lawfully Communicate with us; but he hath no Doubt that he may Lawfully Separate. To this I say Two Things.

First, That the Man's Doubting only on one side in this Matter, doth not make it more safe for him to Separate, than if he had Doubted on both sides. Because indeed if he must Doubt at all, it is his Duty, he is bound to Doubt on both sides; and he is guilty of gross and criminal Ignorance of the Laws of God, if he do not.

And

And if so, then his Doubting only on one side, doth not alter the Case, but it must have the same Resolution as if it was a Double Doubt properly so called.

If it be said, that it is a constant Rule of a Doubting Conscience, and we have allowed it as such; that in Cases where a Man hath only a Doubt on one side of an Action, it is more safe to chuse that side on which he hath no Doubt, than that other concerning which he Doubts: I do readily grant it. But it is to be remembered, that that Rule is always intended, and doth only obtain in such Cases where a Man may certainly without danger of Sinning forbear that Action of the Lawfulness of which he Doubts; though he cannot without danger of Sinning do the Action so long as he Doubts about it. But now in our Case here, it is evident to all Men that are not wilfully blind, that as there may be a danger of Sinning, if a Man should conform with a Doubting Conscience; so there is certainly a danger of Sinning (nay, and we say a much greater danger) if a Man do not conform. So that that Rule hath here no Place at all.

The truth is, Our Case if it be rightly put, is this. A Man is here supposed to Reason thus with himself. ‘ I am very well ‘ satisfied in my own Mind, and I make ‘ no Doubt at all, that I may Lawfully ‘ and without danger of Sin, cut my self off

‘ off from the Communion of the Church.
 ‘ [which yet by his Christianity he is ‘ bound to maintain and preserve as far
 ‘ as he can] And I may likewise Law‘ fully and without danger of Sinning,
 ‘ live in a constant Disobedience and Re‘ fractoriness to all that Authority that ‘ God hath set over me [to which yet
 ‘ by as plain Laws as any are in Nature,
 ‘ or the Gospel, he is bound to be Sub‘ ject:] I say, I am satisfied in my own Mind,
 ‘ that I may Lawfully do both these ‘ Things. But I am very unsatisfied and ‘ doubtful whether in my present Circum‘ stances, it is not my Duty thus to do; so ‘ as that I shall Sin if I do not.

What now would any Prudent Man say to this Case? Why certainly he would say this? That he who can Doubt after this Fashion, is either a very Ill Man or a very Ignorant one. And that such a Man doth a great deal more stand in need of good Advice, and wholesome Instructions about the plain Duties of Christianity; than of Rules and Directions how to behave himself in Doubtful Cases. Because indeed the best Rules of that kind are not to his his Case, so long as he continues thus Ignorant. And if he should observe them, yet that would not justify his Acting, if it should indeed prove contrary to the Law of God, because it was both in his Power, and it was his Duty to know better. A Man's Right proceeding according to the Rules of a Doubting Conscience, in a Case where he is entangled by a wilfully Erroneous one; will no more discharge him from Sin, as to his Soul, if he do an evil Action; than the Second Concoction, though never so regular, can rectifie the Errors of the First as to his Body.

But Secondly, Though that which I have now offered be the proper Answer to the Case before us; yet there is this further to be said to it, viz. Though we should suppose that the Law of God had not obliged us to keep the unity of the Church, or to Obey our Lawful Superiours; but had left it as an indifferent Matter, and that there was no danger at all in forbearing these Things; but the only danger was in doing them: So that the Doubt about Conformity, should have perfectly the Nature of a Single Doubt, as it is put in the Case: I say, now even upon this Supposition it will bear a just Dispute, whether Conformity or Non-conformity be the more eligible side; Nay, I say further, that if the Rule I laid down about a Single Doubt be true, it will appear, that as these Things now stand, it is more reasonable for a Man to Obey the Laws, and Communicate with the Church, so long as he hath only a bare Doubt about the Lawfulness of these Things, than to Disobey and Separate.

For

For thus I Argue. Though in a Single Doubt the Rule be, That a Man should chuse that side of an Action concerning which he hath no Doubt; rather than that concerning which he Doubts: Yet, as was said before, that Rule is always to be understood with this Proviso, That all other Considerations in the Case be equal. If it should happen that a very great Good may be compassed, or a very great Evil may be avoided, by Acting on the Doubtful side: That very Consideration hath weight enough with a Wise Man to turn the Ballance on that side; and to make that which abstractedly considered, was a Doubtful Case, to be clear and plain when it comes cloathed with such Circumstances. As I gave Instances in the Case of Usury and Law Suits. And Twenty more might be added to them, if it was to any Purpose.

If this now be admitted for Truth, we have a plain Resolution of the Case before us, that is this. There are so many great Advantages both to the Kingdom, and to a Man's self, to be obtained by Worshipping God in the way of the Church; and likewise so many both Publick and Private Mischiefs and Inconveniences that are consequent upon Separation: That if in any Case these Considerations have weight enough to Over-balance a simple Doubt about the Lawfulness of an Action, they will certainly have sufficient ficient weight in this Case. And that a Man who is not Swayed by them, doth not Act so reasonably as he might do.

For my part, I should think it very foolishly done of any Man, that, so long as he is utterly uncertain whether he be in the Right or the Wrong (as every one that Doubteth is) should be so confident of his Point; as to venture upon it no less a stake than the Peace of the Kingdom where he lives, and the Security of the Religion Established; and withal his own Ease and Liberty, and lastly, the Fortunes also of his Posterity. And yet such a wise Venture as this doth every one among us make, that upon the account of a bare Doubt about the Lawfulness of the Things enjoined in our Communion, doth persist in Disobedience to the Government, and Separation from the Church.

I wish this was well considered by our Doubting Dissenters: They are wise enough as to the World in other Matters: it is to be desired that they would be as wise in this. And if they were, I dare say it would not at all prejudice their Wisdom as to the other World. It will be but little either to their Comfort or their Reputation at the long-run, to have it said of them; that besides the Disturbance they have all along Occasioned to the Publick Peace and Unity, they have also brought their Estates and Families into danger of Ruin,

Ruin, by the just Prosecutions of Law: they have drawn upon themselves; and all this for the sake of a Cause they themselves must confess, they are altogether uncertain and unresolved about.

But this will appear much clearer, when we have set the Doubt about Conformity upon the right Foot, viz. Considered it as a Double Doubt, as indeed it is, in its own Nature: Which I come now to do.

In the Second place, There are other Dissenters who (as they have good Reason) do Doubt on both sides of this Question. As they Doubt on one hand, whether it be not a Sin to Conform to our Worship; because there are several Things in it which they suspect to be unlawful: So on the other hand, they Doubt whether it be not their Duty to Conform to it; because the Laws of the Church and of the Land, do require them so to do. And of these, as I said, there are likewise Two Sorts. Some perhaps are equally Doubtful whether the Terms of our Communion are Lawful or no, and consequently must Doubt equally whether they be bound to Conform or no. Others Doubt unequally: That is to say, of the Two, it appears more probable to them, that our Communion is Sinful, than that it is a Duty.

Now as to the First of these Cases, The Answer is very short, and it is this. We have before proved by many Arguments,

‘ guments, that in a Case of a Pure Doubt,
 ‘ about the Lawfulness of an Action where
 ‘ the Probabilities on both sides are pret‘ ty equal: In that Case the Command of ‘ Authority doth always turn the Bal‘ lance on its own side; so, as that it is not ‘ only reasonable for the Man to do that ‘ in Obedience to Authority, of the Law‘ fulness of which he Doubteth; but it is ‘ his Duty to do it; he Sins if he do not.
 For this I refer my Reader to the Third
 General Head of this Discourse.

The only difficulty thereof is in the other Case, where the Doubt is unequal. And here the Case is this: As the Man apprehends himself in danger of Sinning if he do not come to Church; and obey the Laws; so he apprehends himself in a greater danger of Sinning if he do: Because it doth appear more probable to him, that our Communion is Sinful, than that it is a Duty: and a greater Probablity, ceteris paribus, is always to be chosen before a less.

But to this likewise we are ready provided of an Answer from the foregoing Discourse, viz. ‘ That though it should be ‘ supposed, that in such a Case as this, where
 ‘ the Ballance is so far inclined one way;
 ‘ the Authority of our Superiours alone ‘ will not have weight enough to cast it on ‘ its own side: Yet in this Particular Case
 ‘ of Church Communion; there are so ‘ many other Arguments to be drawn from

A Discourse concerning

‘ the Consideration of the greater Sin, and the ‘ more dreadful Consequences, of disobeying
 ‘ the Laws than of obeying them; as will
 ‘ with any Impartial Conscientious Man
 ‘ out-weigh all the Probabilities on the other ‘ side, so long as they are not so great as
 ‘ to create a Perswasion; and make it rea‘ sonable for him rather to Conform, how ‘ strong soever his Doubt be about the ‘ Lawfulness of Conformity (so long as it is ‘ but a Doubt;) than to continue in Se- ‘ paration. Vide Third Proposition about a ‘ Double Doubt pag. 404.

This is the Issue upon which we will try the Point before us, and I refuse no indifferent Man, that will but have the Patience to hear what we have to say, to be Umpire between us and our Dissenting Brethren, as to this Controversy.

In the First Place, let us suppose and admit, that the Man who hath these Doubts and Suspicions about the Lawful-neis of our Established Worship, doth really Doubt on the true side; and that he would indeed be a Transgressor of the Law of God, if he should Conform to it.
 But then it must be admitted likewise, that
 That Law of God which forbids these Things in dispute, is wonderfully obscurely declared.

There are no direct Prohibitions, either in the Law of Nature or the Book of God about those Things that are now Contested;

so that the unlawfulness of them is only to be concluded from Consequences.

And those Consequences likewise are so obscure, that the Catholick Church, from Christ's Time till our Reformation, was wholly ignorant of them. For though it doth appear, that either these, or the like Usages, have always been in the Church; Yet it doth not appear, in all that compass of Time, either that any particular Church ever condemned them as Sinful: Or indeed, that any particular Christian did ever Separate from the Church upon the Account of them.

And even at this Day, these Consequences by which they are proved unlawful, are not discovered by our Governours either in Church or State. No, nor by as Learned and Religious Divines of all Perswasions as any in the World.

The most Divines, by far the most; and those as Pious and as Able as any, are clearly of Opinion, that there is nothing Unlawful in our Worship; but that, on the contrary, all Things therein prescribed are at least Innocent, and free from Sin, if not Pure and Apostolical.

So that if it should at last prove, that they are all mistaken: Yet the Law of God, which forbids these Things, being so very obscure, and the Sense of it so hardly to be found out; it is a great Presumption that a Man may very innocently and inculpably be Ignorant of it. And if so, it will be a very little, or no sin at all in him to act against it: Because if it was not his Duty to know this Law, it cannot be his Sin that his Practice is not according to it. And if it was his Duty to know it, yet it being so obscurely delivered, and only to be gathered by such remote Consequences; it can at most be but a Sin of Ignorance, in an ordinary Person, where so many of the best Guides are mistaken, if he should transgress it.

And then farther, This must likewise be considered; That if Conformity to our Liturgy and Worship should prove a Sin in any Instance: Yet the Evil Consequences of it extend no farther than the Man's Person that is guilty of it. There is no damage ariseth either to the Christian Religion, or to the Publick Interest of the Kingdom, by any Man's being a Conformist. But on the contrary, as Things stand with us; Unity and Conformity to the Established way, seem to bring a great Advantage to both (as I hinted before) and to be a probable means to secure us from many Dangers, with which our Reformed Religion, and the Peace of the Kingdom is threatned.

Well, but now on the other hand. Let us suppose the contrary side of the Question to be true, viz. That our Governours in this Matter are in the Right, and we are in the Wrong. That there is nothing required of us in the Church of England, as a Term of Communion, but what is very Innocent and Lawful; however it be our misfortune to Doubt that there is; and in a zealous Indulgence to these Doubts, we take the liberty to live in open disobedience to our Lawful Governours, and break the Unity of the Church into which we were Baptized.

I say, admitting the Thing to be thus; what kind of Sin shall we be guilty of then? Why certainly we are guilty of no less a Sin than causelessly dividing the Body of Christ, against which we are so severely cautioned in the New Testament.

We are guilty of the Breach of as plain Laws as any are in the Bible, viz. Of all those that oblige us to keep the Unity of the Spirit in the Bond of Peace: that Command us to Obey those that are over us in the Lord; to be Subject to the Higher Powers; to submit to every Ordinance of Man for the Lord's sake; to be subject not only for Wrath, but for Conscience sake. I say, these plain Laws we disobey for Conscience sake; and we disobey them too in such Instances, where we have the whole Catholick Church of old, and far the greatest and the best part of the present Church, of a different Perswasion from us.

Well, but as if this was not enough. What are the Consequences of this our Sin?

Sin? (For by the Consequences of a Sin, the greatness of it is always to be estimated, I speak as to the Material part of it, with which we are here concerned.) Why, they are most Terrible and Dreadful, both with respect to our selves and others,

By this unnatural Separation, we do, for any thing we know, put our selves out of the Communion of the Catholick Church; and consequently out of the enjoyment of the ordinary means of Salvation.

We maintain and keep up Divisions and Disorders in the Church, and lend a helping hand to all those Animosities and Hatreds, all that bitter Contention and Strife, and Uncharitableness, which hath long torn the very Bowels of Christ's Church, and given occasion to that Deluge of Atheism, and Profaneness, and Impiety which hath over-spread the Face of it.

We put Affronts upon our Lawful Governours, who should be in the place of God to us. We give Scandal to all our Brethren that make a Conscience of living Peaceably and Piously. And lastly, as we offer a very fair Handle and Pretence to all Discontented and Factious Men to Practise against the Best of Governments; so we take most effectual course to Ruin the Best Constituted Church in the World, and with it the Reformed Religion in this Kingdom.

This

This now being the Nature, and these being the Consequences of our Separation from the Established Church among us; I leave it to any indifferent Man to Determine, whether any Doubt about the Lawfulness of our Communion, though that Doubt be backed with greater Probabilities than do appear on the other side; nay, if you will, with all the Probabilities that can consist with the Nature of a Doubt; can have weight enough to Ballance against such a Sin, and such Consequences as Separation in our Case doth involve a Man in? I think there is no unconcerned Person but will pronounce, that supposing where there are Doubts on both sides, a Man is to chuse that side on which there is the least appearance of Sin; he is in this Case certainly bound to chuse Communion with the Established Church, rather than Separation from it. And that is all I Contend for.

But now, after all this is said; it must be acknowledged, that if there be any Man who hath other apprehensions of these matters, and that after a Consideration of all things that are to be said for or against Conformity, it doth appear to him upon the whole matter, both more probable that our Communion is sinful, than that it is a Duty; and withal, that to Communicate with us, will involve him in a greater sin, and in worse Consequences, than to continue

tinue in Separation: I say, if any Man have so unfortunate an understanding as to make such an estimate of things; we must acknowledge, that according to all the Rules of a Doubting Conscience, such a Man is rather to continue a Non-conformist, than to obey the Laws of the King and the Church. But then let him look to it; for his acting in this Case according to the Best Rules of a Doubting Conscience, will not (as I said before) at all acquit him either of the Guilt or Consequences of Criminal Schism and Disobedience: Supposing that indeed he is all along under a Mistake as (we say) he certainly is; and that there is nothing required in our Communion, that he might not honestly and lawfully comply with, as there certainly is not. Unless in the mean time, the Man fell into these Mistakes without any Fault of his; and God Almighty, who is the Judge of all Mens Hearts and Circumstances, doth know he had not means and opportunities to understand better.
